

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

"Helping others is the theme of my life. My goal is to set up a 'therapy farm' with the proceeds from my books"

Grace Olson is an author, life coach and animal lover based in Leeds, West Yorkshire. She is the writer of best-selling inspirational memoirs, "The Yard" and "The Farm" and four children's books to empower young minds. She has featured on Channel 5's "The Yorkshire Vet" with her wonderful therapy sheep.

www.graceolsonauthor.com

My Weekly, April 26

It feels so bonkers that people burst out laughing!

From unexpected giggles to heartfelt conversations, Grace's unique sheep therapy is helping people feel better

You might recognise Grace Olson from Channel 5's hit TV show, The Yorkshire Vet, but step into her field and it soon becomes clear who the real stars are: her flock of extraordinary sheep.

In this picturesque corner of the countryside, something rather incredible is unfolding. People arrive carrying grief, anxiety or everyday worries, and leave feeling lighter, calmer and uplifted. The reason? Sheep therapy.

Grace, a qualified therapist, likes to keep things simple. Sessions begin with a conversation, but there's no rigid structure. Instead, there's an open space, fresh air and the gentle presence of loving animals who are free to come and go as they please.

"None of them are forced to do anything," she explains. "But they're so nosy that they come along."

Before long, a curious sheep will wander over, often leading to an impromptu cosy snuggle. It can feel disarming at first – but that's exactly the point.

Sheep, Grace says, exist in a naturally calm state, and that's something humans instinctively respond to. Being close to them helps the body relax, creating the conditions for deeper healing. But there's another layer too.

"There's a comedy element of being with sheep," she laughs. "It feels so bonkers that people burst out laughing – and then they start talking about the things they really need to talk about."

At the heart of it all is Merlin, Grace's first sheep and still the most intuitive of the flock. Time and again, he has shown an incredible ability to sense when someone is struggling.

"He instinctively knows when somebody is not happy," Grace says. "He'll go towards them and just stand with them."

She recalls one woman who came to the field after experiencing a devastating loss. While the other animals munched their hay, Merlin left his food and went straight to her, standing silently by her side for an hour. There was no training, no command – just instinct.

"He knew," Grace says simply. Merlin will be the star, but he's far from the only character in the flock. Beryl brings something entirely different – a sense of stiltiness that seems to anchor those around him. Unlike Merlin, who moves between people, Beryl is quite content to stand quietly, allowing

Grace with Rhubarb

Rhubarb is the cover star of Grace's new book!

Rhubarb Finds His Family is on sale now. Brown Dog Books, PB, £9.99

Sheepy Stories

Grace's flock don't just help people in the field – they've also inspired a series of uplifting children's books.

Written with younger readers in mind, her "sheepy stories" follow characters like Merlin, Beryl and Rhubarb as they navigate friendship, confidence and big feelings – all wrapped in warm, engaging tales.

"I want to help kids understand they can be in charge of their thoughts," says Grace.

Grace draws on her own life experiences when writing, creating stories that gently encourage children to challenge negative thinking, build self-belief and feel more in control of their emotions.

Her latest book, Rhubarb Finds His Family, sees the mischievous sheep set off on a heartfelt journey to discover where he truly belongs.

For more information, visit graceolsonauthor.com.

Close connection with her flock depression and grief all find their way to her field, and while every journey is different, the starting point is often the same: a need to feel seen, safe and supported.

Her work, and her remarkable flock, have also reached a wider audience thanks to The Yorkshire Vet. Grace has appeared on the show multiple times, sharing both her animals and her approach with viewers across the country.

"I've been on so many times," she says. "It's been brilliant fun."

While being recognised has taken some getting used to, what matters most to Grace is how the show has helped change perceptions.

"People have seen how wonderful sheep are," she says. "They are as emotionally intelligent as dogs."

Alongside her therapy work, Grace has also found another way to reach people – through writing. What began as stories shared online during lockdown quickly grew, leading to her writing memoirs and a series of children's stories inspired by her charming flock.

It's clear that Grace and her sheep are working daily miracles – and that something truly special is happening in her field. According to Grace, it's often in the quietest moments, as the sheep wander over and visitors begin to unwind, that something deeper takes hold. There's a mysterious power in the way they choose to connect, offering calm and companionship without judgement – exactly what's needed.

in quieter moments, it's his affectionate nature that shines through – he calls out when he sees Grace and follows her everywhere.

Each sheep has their own personality, and together they create a dynamic that makes the therapy so effective. For one woman struggling with workplace bullying and low self-esteem, this made all the difference. Spending time with the sheep – who approached her, stayed close and seemed to choose her – helped her see herself differently.

"It showed her that she has value," Grace explains.

With that shift came the confidence to set boundaries and stand her ground – something she hadn't felt able to do before.

It's a transformation Grace has witnessed many times. Anxiety,

The Guardian, March 26

The screenshot shows the top of a Guardian article. The header includes 'Support the Guardian Fund independent journalism', 'Support from £2.76 a week', 'Print subscriptions', 'Search jobs', and 'Sign in'. The navigation bar lists 'News', 'Opinion', 'Sport', 'Culture', and 'Lifestyle'. The article title is 'The pet I'll never forget: Merlin the therapy sheep' with a sub-headline 'When Merlin came to live with me, his only job was to clear the weeds from my fields. But his calm, affectionate nature has made him a vital part of my therapy practice'. The author is Grace Olson, dated Mon 30 Mar 2026 07:00 BST. A photo shows Grace Olson smiling next to a white sheep. An advertisement for Audible is visible on the right side of the article.

Merlin the sheep came to me by chance four years ago. A friend of mine had a lamb she was bottle-feeding, but she couldn't look after it any more so she asked me if I could take care of it. I live in Moortown, Leeds, and rent about three hectares (seven acres) of land in Eccup, a small village nearby, where I've kept horses for about 13 years. I needed some help clearing the weeds that the horses wouldn't eat and sheep seemed like the best solution because they'll eat anything - so I said yes.

The lamb was called Bambi and when I came to collect her, my friend offered me another lamb, Merlin. Shortly after, Bambi died and it was just Merlin left. It wasn't long until he started to show his special powers.

I've worked as an equine therapist for eight years, helping people with illness, depression and grief. My practice involves outdoor therapy and my horses are my usual assistants. My clients visit me in the field, they stroke and cuddle the animals and it eases them into a state of calmness that allows them to open up about the things they may never have been able to talk about.

After I got Merlin I realised that sheep are some of the most relaxed mammals, which makes them the perfect therapists because being near them calms people down too. Merlin in particular has a knack for it. I first saw this during a therapy session with a client who had severe depression. Merlin was just six months old at the time; he trotted up to her and pushed his body on to her leg. She laughed and bent down to cuddle him - until then this woman hadn't smiled for almost a year.

From then on, Merlin blossomed into an incredibly empathetic and sensitive animal. I never force him to interact with clients; he comes to them naturally when he can sense that they're suffering. In February last year, he left his food and ran across the snowy field to comfort a client who was grieving the death of her son.

Merlin oozes love and affection. He also has a silly side. He's playful like a cheeky labrador, and adores it when people scratch his head - he's more dog-like than dogs. I even wrote a children's book, called Merlin Finds His Magic, all about the life of the therapy sheep.

I now have six sheep on my land who help me with my work, but Merlin is the shining star of the flock.

As told to Sinéad Campbell

The Dalesman, Feb 26

Amazing Grace

Therapist tells us about her magical sheep

Met Merlin the magical sheep... actually, you may already know him, after all, he features in the opening sequence of TV's The Yorkshire Vet and in several episodes. "Yes, he's something of a star, and he knows it," laughs Grace Olson, a frequent guest on the hit show.

She's sitting in a field in Eccup, midway between Pool in Wharfedale and Kirkstall Abbey, not too far from Harewood House.

DECEMBER 2024 43

This is prime agricultural country, and on this seven-acre plot a handful of sheep graze among a motley collection of horses, each of them a rescue animal.

"It's an absolutely glorious place," says Grace as she looks to the distant horizon across the surrounding fields.

It is below these big skies that Grace uses her therapy skills acquired over the past thirty years, to help people with life-limiting conditions.

She has put aside past personal demons and devoted her life to helping others – with the assistance of her farmyard friends.

"I've been here for twelve years now, and we only ended up here because I kept messaging the lady who owned the fields. I'd leave messages on fenceposts, asking if I could use them!

"I started off by doing horse therapy whereby I treated people who were dying by introducing them to the horses.

"And then one day, purely by accident, when I was doing a therapy session with a client suffering from cancer, Merlin came across to her, and she suddenly started to smile and laugh, and that's how it happened.

44 DECEMBER 2024

"Merlin is a texel crossed with a north country mule and is nearly two and is so calm, people connect to him.

"Oncologists used to refer patients to me, although they can't officially do that anymore, because of the impact the treatment can have on their mental and physical health."

Explaining the benefits of her therapy session is difficult, accepts Grace, but she speaks of "magical moments" of "peace" and "tranquillity" during her sessions.

"People come here, they sit down with me and the sheep will come across and I will listen to them, and the presence of the sheep seems to help them open up and talk about things which they would otherwise feel unable to do, they suddenly start to unburden themselves.

"I try and help people sort out their lives, and the presence of the sheep, which they will cuddle, seems to help, they encourage people relax."

Grace, who has written several children's story books featuring her therapy sheep, goes on: "It is such a magical time seeing people with the sheep when they're receiving therapy, and there's a really deep connection and real honesty.

"Helping others is the theme of my life. I have been a therapist for the past thirty years, helping people with a wide range of problems. My goal is to set up a therapy farm with the proceeds from my books where I can hopefully treat terminally ill people for free.

"The animals are free to come and go and it's really quite surreal. A specific animal will know when to come. Sometimes it might be one of the horses or the sheep, or all of them. We just let it happen quite naturally.

"I can't really describe it, but when people are dying it's almost like something has opened up within them that makes unusual phenomena happen. It becomes the most wonderful, magical, bizarre experience." 🐏

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Telegraph & Argos Weekend Magazine, Jan 26

18 Saturday January 31, 2026

BOOKS

Yorkshire author's therapy animals have inspired her books

Grace is healing hearts and minds with her books, horses and sheep

By Grace Olson
Continuity Careers

ONCE upon a time everyone loved to read books and tell stories by the fireside. But due to modern technology and high pressure, busy lives, the number of people reading physical books has declined. People prefer to look at their phones to get the news and to look at social media. A habit which is causing many people to suffer from poor mental health and disturbed sleep because 'scrolling' negatively affects the way our brains function.

With this in mind, the Government has launched a fantastic new initiative entitled, The National Year of Reading. Their aim is to encourage people of all ages to get back into reading books, and as an author I am very excited about this.

So, how can reading an actual, solid book help you? Are you sitting comfortably? Then I shall begin.

There's something rather magical about picking up a book and turning the pages. It's very relaxing and the low and dedication of the author, poured into each page, is a wonderful gift for you to receive. Reading a book calms the brain, reduces stress hormones and creates new neural pathways which leads to an improved memory. It can also lead to better sleep which is something I have found far myself as my new routine is to read a book for an hour before bed.

Another awesome thing about reading a physical book is that you learn new words! I'm a real 'define-it-for-me' person. The Don Cow Rib, by John Lauer Kaye. He was born in the 1940s so you can imagine the sort of vocabulary he was using - words that are no longer spoken in every day conversation. Yes, I can't lie, it's making me feel a bit of a thicko but in the same time it's really fun to learn new words as the ripe age of 42. I can feel my brain cells pulsating as they crackle the methua back to life.

Grace Olson with her horses Pippa and Fred. Images: Pooch and Poles Photography

I got back into books in my 40s. Life had been too busy before then for me to even think about such things as reading. But I'm so glad I did because when Covid arrived, my brain had become so inert that it inspired me to write my own books. After a while, people began asking me to write a book. I had nothing else to do and acres of time on my hands so I thought, why not? My lockdown stories grew and became quite a bit of a genre. My first book was about a very characterful, elderly mare that I had been looking after for a friend. The horse had managed to escape from the field, during a blizzard and had ended up in someone's garden. The chance was off the scale. Anyway, the story went down so well that it got hundreds and hundreds of 'likes'. This encouraged me to set up my own Facebook page and do more story telling. It was eye-opening! My page gained a huge following in no time, and people began messaging me to say how much my stories were lifting their spirits and helping them to feel less isolated and depressed.

After a while, people began asking me to write a book. I had nothing else to do and acres of time on my hands so I thought, why not? My lockdown stories grew and became quite a bit of a genre. My first book was about a very characterful, elderly mare that I had been looking after for a friend. The horse had managed to escape from the field, during a blizzard and had ended up in someone's garden. The chance was off the scale. Anyway, the story went down so well that it got hundreds and hundreds of 'likes'. This encouraged me to are bursting with hilarious adventures on horseback. Many readers have said that my books give them the same joyous feel as All Creatures Great and Small, which has been such a humbling thing to hear because that was my favourite series when I was young.

The Yell and The Farm have ended up being so much more than I could ever have imagined. They have become an extension of my therapy work as readers have found them to be transformative and inspiring and very easy to read. I believe it's due to that wonderful airway of Yorkshire folk and farm animals, a recipe which definitely does something positive to the brain and makes you feel very happy. The story doesn't end here. A new chapter brought me a bottle of lamb and ignited my eyes to the wonders of sheep. Who knew they are very similar in nature to dogs? It was such a wonderful surprise and it didn't take long before five more sheep trooped into my life. Of course they inspired me to write a whole series of sheep-themed children's books with the aim to engage young minds. I believe that stories are the perfect vehicle for teaching vital life lessons in a non-pressured way. These books were launched on Channel 5's popular series, The Yorkshire Vet, which was a tremendous experience.

My big dream is that one day my books will be my income so that I can afford to travel terminally ill people for free with my wonderful horses and sheep who are now animal therapists. So, I invite you to give reading a go. Pay a visit to an independent book shop and browse the shelves. Or if you feel interested in my own Yorkshire tales, you can find out more on my website - www.graceolsonauthor.com

Saturday January 31, 2026 19

BOOKS

Grace helps people with mental health issues, using sheep and horse therapy

Grace initially wrote a memoir chronicling her experience with post-natal depression

Grace, with Toffee, started writing during lockdown

Grace's books are 'bursting with adventures on horseback'

Telegraph & Argos Saturday January 31, 2026

Weekend Magazine

Exploring Salfaire: Walkable village is still standing proud Page 20

Walk p23

Motors p24

7 Days p25

Healing hearts and minds

Author's therapy animals have inspired books

Chat Magazine, Jan 26

Healing herd

Feeling sheepish? My flock of baa-my therapists can help
Grace Olson, 52, Leeds, West Yorkshire

TRUE-LIFE

You can't bleed working with sheep

With my book Merlin Finds His Magic - and his woolly hero

Sheila Joy: A hug with Teddy the lamb

Me and my pals have close-knit bond

As I held on to his soft wool, I felt so comforted

NO REGRETS I let my teen swap school for TikTok

BAA-RMY BUT BRILL My sheep's a therapist

SUPERMARKET STEALS 22 BARGAIN BUYS

TROLLEY-TASTIC!

WIN 4x £20 PUZZLE 10

ENTER £5 for details or visit chatprizes.com/puzzles

chat The original real-life mag

7 FEBRUARY 2025 £1.45

WIN A HOLIDAY TO TURKEY

18 PUZZLES

45 CASH PRIZES

MONSTER HIDDEN IN MY HOME
I'd no idea he was waiting to pounce

WHAT WAS GROWING INSIDE ME?!
A cyst? A baby? Not quite...

NO REGRETS I let my teen swap school for TikTok

BAA-RMY BUT BRILL My sheep's a therapist

SUPERMARKET STEALS 22 BARGAIN BUYS

TROLLEY-TASTIC!

Reunited in the morgue
FIRST MY EX TOOK OUR BOY THEN HE KILLED HIM
I fought for years to get my son home - instead he died in utter terror

To find out more about Grace's work and books visit graceolsonauthor.com

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Positive News Magazine, Jan 26

The Yorkshire Post, Jan 26

12 THE YORKSHIRE POST
Monday January 19 2026

Focus | Education on Me

GOING BY THE BOOK: Grace Olson's sheep-themed stories have a wellbeing message; inset, with Yorkshire Vet star Julian Norton.

Following Grace's sheep to get the young reading

Steve Teale
NEWS CORRESPONDENT

GRACE Olson, Yorkshire vet star and 'sheep therapist', has penned a series of children's books to empower young minds for the 2026 government initiative, The National Year of Reading, a drive to get the nation back into reading physical books to boost mental health. She is a therapist, author, and regular contributor on Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet and is hoping to encourage a love of reading with her stories which feature her real-life therapy sheep.

She is on a mission to help young children grow into resilient teenagers by teaching them vital lessons all wrapped up in beautifully illustrated, fable-style stories.

Each sheep-themed story contains a unique message. The first teaches that love is a superpower. The second teaches that it's ok to be your real self even if that means you're different to others. The third teaches the power of positive thinking and the fourth teaches unity – that we are really all one family on planet Earth.

Ms Olson suffered from depression during her youth and attempted to take her own life. She believes that her poor mental health was due to not being taught how to be in charge of her mind and hence, she became the victim of negative self-talk and a belief that she was 'less than' others.

Fate brought Ms Olson a truly remarkable psychologist who helped her to learn how to 'reprogramme' her mind and become the master of her thoughts and emotions. She now uses her experiences to help others in her therapy work and in her books.

She said: "If we can instil a sense of self-worth at a young age and help children realise that their mind is a tool which can be used positively, they will become teenagers who are positive and able to withstand the stresses that come with that phase of life."

She believes that reading books and immersing in the illustrations can help children develop their full creative potential and rise above the toxicity within social media and modern technology. She also believes that lessons taught within the context of a fun, adventure story are more easily absorbed and accepted by young minds. Observing her therapy sheep inspired her to use them as the role models within the stories and she feels that as they are real, this adds a relatable connection for children who read the books.

Ms Olson is an Institute of Leadership and Management (ILM) level 5 coach and equine facilitated therapist. She is also qualified in lymphatic drainage massage and has worked with cancer patients for 30 years.

In her 'outdoor' therapy work, she and her sheep and horses help people to find inner peace and emotional balance so that they can cope better with life's challenges. She and her sheep have been featured on The Yorkshire Vet several times and will be in the next series.

Ms Olson is based in Leeds and is the writer of best-selling, tragicomic memoirs The Yard and The Farm – books which bring joy and transformation for the reader. She has also penned a series of beautifully illustrated, sheep-themed children's books to empower young minds – Merlin Finds His Magic, Galahad Finds His Voice, Berel Finds His Wings and Rhubarb Finds His Family.

She said: "It was very therapeutic to write about my mental health struggles and a lot of fun to wrap it all up in the comedy of the relationships that were growing in my life at that time – new friendships with horse-mad people and connections with the noble horses who ultimately healed me on the deepest of levels."

"As I am a therapist, I wanted my books to feel like a friend and show how it is possible to find inner strength and self-healing even when we feel totally awful about ourselves."

"We all struggle with doubts and negative thoughts but ordinary people can live extraordinary lives and we can find mental and physical health benefits if we open up to the wonderful atmosphere of nature and the great outdoors."

"I write as an extension of my therapy work. So even though my novels are full of adventures, rich dialogue and very character driven, they also carry deeply meaningful and relatable messages conveyed in such a way as to teach without preaching. These stories are my life experiences but they are universal which is why they are helpful for others."

More details about her series of stories can be found on her website – <https://www.graceolsonauthor.com>

The Dalesman, December 2025

Amazing Grace

Therapist tells us about her magical sheep

Meet Merlin the magical sheep... actually, you may already know him, after all, he features in the opening sequence of TV's The Yorkshire Vet and in several episodes. "Yes, he's something of a star, and he knows it," laughs Grace Olson, a frequent guest on the hit show.

She's sitting in a field in Eccup, midway between Pool in Wharfedale and Kirkstall Abbey, not too far from Harewood House.

DECEMBER 2024 43

This is prime agricultural country, and on this seven-acre plot a handful of sheep graze among a motley collection of horses, each of them a rescue animal.

"It's an absolutely glorious place," says Grace as she looks to the distant horizon across the surrounding fields.

It is below these big skies that Grace uses her therapy skills acquired over the past thirty years, to help people with life-limiting conditions.

She has put aside past personal demons and devoted her life to helping others – with the assistance of her farmyard friends.

"I've been here for twelve years now, and we only ended up here because I kept messaging the lady who owned the fields. I'd leave messages on fenceposts, asking if I could use them!

"I started off by doing horse therapy whereby I treated people who were dying by introducing them to the horses.

"And then one day, purely by accident, when I was doing a therapy session with a client suffering from cancer, Merlin came across to her, and she suddenly started to smile and laugh, and that's how it happened.

44 DECEMBER 2024

"Merlin is a texel crossed with a north country mule and is nearly two and is so calm, people connect to him.

"Oncologists used to refer patients to me, although they can't officially do that anymore, because of the impact the treatment can have on their mental and physical health."

Explaining the benefits of her therapy session is difficult, accepts Grace, but she speaks of "magical moments" of "peace" and "tranquillity" during her sessions.

"People come here, they sit down with me and the sheep will come across and I will listen to them, and the presence of the sheep seems to help them open up and talk about things which they would otherwise feel unable to do, they suddenly start to unburden themselves.

"I try and help people sort out their lives, and the presence of the sheep, which they will cuddle, seems to help, they encourage people relax."

Grace, who has written several children's story books featuring her therapy sheep, goes on: "It is such a magical time seeing people with the sheep when they're receiving therapy, and there's a really deep connection and real honesty.

"Helping others is the theme of my life. I have been a therapist for the past thirty years, helping people with a wide range of problems. My goal is to set up a therapy farm with the proceeds from my books where I can hopefully treat terminally ill people for free.

"The animals are free to come and go and it's really quite surreal. A specific animal will know when to come. Sometimes it might be one of the horses or the sheep, or all of them. We just let it happen quite naturally.

"I can't really describe it, but when people are dying it's almost like something has opened up within them that makes unusual phenomena happen. It becomes the most wonderful, magical, bizarre experience." 🐏

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Country Squire Magazine, Dec 25

The screenshot shows the Country Squire Magazine website. At the top, the magazine's logo is displayed in red. Below it is a banner for a book by George Gibbs. The main content area features a large image of four children's books: 'Merlin finds his Magic', 'Galahad finds his Voice', 'Bere finds his Wings', and 'Rhubarb finds his Family'. Below the books, there is a section titled 'Meeting Grace Olson' with a small photo of her. To the right of the main text, there is a sidebar with a 'Listen to this article' button, a 'Share this' section with social media icons, and a 'Subscribe Today' button. The article text begins with 'I came across Grace Olson for the first time when I watched The Yorkshire Vet, Channel 5's documentary series that follows the lives and work of veterinary teams in Yorkshire, as they treat a wide variety of animals in both rural and urban settings, and I was immediately interested in her work as a sheep therapist.'

When Grace had her daughter, she suffered from prolonged post-natal depression and decided to take up horse riding again, a pastime she had enjoyed as a teenager. Grace explained how horse riding helped her enormously and she ended up having a session of equine assisted therapy which, she says, was incredible. Watching how the facilitator and her horses uncovered and released deep-rooted negative belief patterns, helped Grace with her own depression and enabled her to start to feel genuinely happy. Grace's experience led her to gain her own qualification in equine facilitated coaching and she subsequently got her own horse, shared a field with friends and set up to do equine therapy.

However, it was when a friend asked her if she would take on a couple of bottle-fed lambs that things started to change. Grace knew that the sheep would be a benefit to have around as they would eat the weeds and help to reduce the worm burden of horse pastures. However, she didn't bargain for how friendly they would be and, she says, she loved them instantly.

It was during one of Grace's therapy sessions with a very depressed lady that the sheep chose to get involved and Grace says it was eye-opening to see, how just being with a sheep, helped this lady to laugh. Over the course of a few sessions with various people, Merlin the lamb kept choosing to be involved with the therapy, and Grace began to realise that he knew what he was doing. Merlin knew that his presence was cheering people up.

Grace has a drive and passion which is obvious to anyone who knows her story. She uses this drive and passion in her therapy and it also served her well when, after writing a blog during lockdown to cheer people up, she ventured further afield and started to write her memoir, following her own journey about how she got back into the saddle. This resulted in her first book and, The Yard – How A Horse Healed My Heart, was born. Despite the book being rejected by every publisher she sent it too, she didn't give up and, with true Yorkshire grit, she decided to self publish – something, she admits, was a scary but, ultimately brilliant, decision when the book sold out on the first day of publication and reached number 1 on Amazon – one in the eye for all those rejections she received!

Grace's publishing success has led her to continue writing and she now has two further memoir-novels about how horses can help to health mental health issues, along with a four part series of sheep themed children's fables specifically written to empower young minds. Grace's stories instill values of empathy, self confidence, positive thinking and unity, wrapped up in beautifully illustrated tales.

Grace tells me that her ultimate wish is that one day she will be able to afford her own land and set up a therapy farm to help terminally ill people for free, if they don't have enough money to pay. Grace explained that she 'wishes that my books would sell in their millions so that they can be my income to fund this dream! I honestly believe my novels would make a great TV series which would then help me to fund my passion. So, if any scriptwriters are reading maybe they can help!'

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Young Stock Magazine, Dec 25

Grace and her sheep...

Winter is a wonderful time of year because when it's cold and dark outside we can enjoy jumping into a book to make us feel happy. My pet sheep would love you to read their stories which I helped them to write. Would you like to meet them?

Let's begin with Merlin. He was my first pet sheep and he wanted to write a story about his magical powers. I said, 'But Merlin is that true? Are you really magical?' and he replied, 'Yes I am and so is every single child in the world.' So together, we wrote a story that will help you to find out your very own hidden magic.

Now let's meet Colohad. He is a perfectly unusual sheep and he wanted to write a story about how he felt when he realised that he wasn't the same as all the others. He tried so hard to fit in and be like them but that made him feel sad.

One day he found that inside himself was the courage to enjoy being different and he would love to tell you all about it in his book.

Who's next? It's Bere! Little Bere! was the smallest of all the sheep and he had a big problem. He kept thinking that nobody would like him and that he wasn't as good as everyone else. He was terribly unhappy. Oh no! What can he do to feel happier? Well, he found out a very useful remedy and he asked me to write it in his story to help you to feel happier too.

Last - but not least - is Rhubarb. Rhubarb is a very adventurous little lamb and he wanted to write a story that would help lots of children to see that the whole world has a very special secret that will bring great joy to everyone who knows about it. Dive into Rhubarb's book to find out what it is!

Merlin, Colohad, Bere! and Rhubarb are all real sheep who have all featured on The Yorkshire Vet. They love being on the telly! If you want to find out more about them, have a look at my website <https://www.graceolsonauthor.com>

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Daily Star Sunday, Dec 25

BAGA
Chipz has signed a big-money deal to perform at Butlin's holiday resort. The RuPaul's Drag Race UK finalist will be at its Don't Tell Mama bash at the resort in Bognor Regis next month.

HOT TV

ALL THE TOP TELLY NEWS
with ED GLEAVE

edward.gleave@dailystar.co.uk

MOLLY: YULE BE JUST GREAT!

MOLLY Smith is getting very festive indeed. The Love Island: All Stars winner has been having fun at Christmas parties in the run-up to the big day. As you can see, she has all the right gear for this time of year. A source close to her said: "Molly loves the festive period. "It's a chance for her to dress up in festive outfits and have some fun."

Lamb's tale for Grace

GRACE Olson has penned a children's book. The star of The Yorkshire Vet tells a story about a lamb in Rhubarb Finds His Family, which features illustrations by Andrew Prescott. She said: "It's about a little orphan lamb who goes on an adventure to find a new mummy. "On this journey he makes several new friends, one of which is a very wise pony. "This pony helps him to discover that everyone is part of one big family bathed in the love of one mother... Mother Nature. It's a story full of bravery, resilience and love." For details visit graceolsonauthor.com

CARMEY Cafe

Tinsel,
LAUGHTER, AND
A LITTLE BIT OF CHAOS

Your Horse, Dec 25 Christmas Short Story

SHORT STORY

After losing her nerve in the saddle, Grace plans a quiet Boxing Day at home — until her friend Jack persuades her out for a snowy ride that turns into a hilarious, heart-stopping adventure. With medieval gowns, recorders, TV-set explosions and one very upset bull, she discovers that courage sometimes comes with a side of chaos — and this wild ride proves to be the best gift of all

BOXING DAY ARRIVES with a sprinkling of snow, reminding me of my youth at the annual riding school treasure hunt. I smile wistfully as I begin the post-Christmas tidy of the living room — my new, dull, annual thing “Are you busy?” texts my friend Jack, “Just clearing up after yesterday,” I reply. “Leave that ‘til later! Let’s go for a ride!” My stomach ties itself in a knot and then those phone rings. It’s Jack. “I know you’re worried about riding again, but today’s a good day to get over those nerves. The roads are quiet and there won’t be any tractors dragging noisy machinery.”

“Erms,” I reply. “I don’t know why I’m so nervous after that. She only centered for a bit and then stopped. What’s wrong with me?” “You’re overthinking as usual,” Jack laughs. “So, stop thinking, come up here and let’s go out. You know I’ll regret it if you don’t...” Jack is right. It’s a beautiful winter’s day and I need to get over my stiletto fears and just get back out riding. “Great! I’ll see you in a bit,” says Jack as I dash upstairs to get changed. My mind begins to whir. What if there is a really noisy tractor and my mare runs off again? Then just turn her into the hedge. She’ll soon stop, replies the sensible part of my brain. What if I can’t turn her though? What would you rather do? Clean the house or go for a ride? Cleaning the house is the opposite of fun. I remember how exciting it felt to decorate a riding school pony with tinsel before the Boxing Day treasure hunt. So, taking a deep breath, I grab some tinsel off the tree before marching out of the house and into the car.

“Gillian zooms past, medieval gown flying behind her and the veil on her headpiece flapping like a streamer”

JANUARY 2024 YOUR HORSE 23

Buddy is such a laid-back horse, but then so is Poppy after the years of effort I’ve put in. I know deep down that I don’t need to worry, so I tie the tinsel around her neck and lead her to the mounting block, swallow my anxiety and get on. “Well done, that’s step one,” grins Jack. She leaps on, cowboy style, and declares: “Right off we go!”

We chatter out onto the lane and I watch the snow dusting the fields like icing sugar. The old stone farmhouse is dressed for Christmas and a jolly robin hops along the wall, tweeting melodically. It is probably shouting obscenities at us, but it is still lovely to hear chirping away. I smile happily as we turn onto the bridle path that winds behind the farm. “I’m so glad I came out; it’s so lovely and peaceful!”

“You-hoo!” calls a voice from nearby, making me jump out of my skin. “Oh no, it’s Mad Gillian,” bawses Jack. “What the hell is she wearing this time?” My jaw drops open at the sight of Gillian, riding side-saddle, resplendent in a billowing medieval gown complete with a double hooped corset and floppy veil. Poppy snorts at the bizarre spectacle, promptly regaining my nerves.

“Merry Christmas!” greets Gillian. “I’m on my way to an early music recital at the church hall. How fortunate to bump into you both. You can accompany me there and perhaps we can play some carols!” Gillian rummages in her saddle bags and pulls out a selection of wooden recorders of varying sizes.

“Oh my God this is going to send Poppy into orbit!” “Erms, I don’t think Poppy will like hearing recorders,” I mumble, my chest tightening. “Nonsense, dear. On the contrary, horses find music soothing and it’s just the thing for you after your unfortunate experience. I’m sure it’ll help you feel calmer. Here you are, and here’s one for you, Jack.”

Gillian presses the recorder into my hand while Jack rolls her eyes. “I’m sure you both learned recorder at school, but I’ll give you a quick recap.” We ride along, listening to Gillian’s lecture about the origins of medieval music, while silently praying that no one we know will see us. Under different circumstances, I might have found the history of the recorder an interesting subject, but on my first ride out after a stressful episode, it is the last thing I want to hear about.

Mind you, Gillian is so enthusiastic and her words are so hypnotic that after a while, I suddenly find myself attempting to play the Holly and the Ivy. Gillian claps her hands.

“Gillian rummages in her saddle bags and pulls out a selection of wooden recorders”

24 YOUR HORSE JANUARY 2024

WWW.YOURHORSE.CO.UK

“It happens every Christmas,” she laughs, “but it’s a good excuse to go somewhere new for a ride and I often pretend to get lost on purpose. This time, though, I genuinely am totally lost and I was freaked out because this snow’s getting heavy, isn’t it?” I look around at the snow, which is indeed now falling fast and settling in a way that suggests the strong possibility of sledging. It fascinates me that Ervie didn’t ask Gillian why she is dressed like something out of Cawker. “We’ll be riding past the pub, so tag along with us,” I say.

The presence of another rider helps me to feel calmer and more like my old self. I begin to relax and enjoy the chatter. “We’re so lucky to be able to ride here,” I sigh happily. “Yes, it’s gorgeous,” agrees Ervie. “What’s that village over there? It looks like a Christmas card.”

“That’s the film set for the Birddie Farm soap opera, but it looks real, doesn’t it? We’ll be riding past it as you get back to the pub.” “I don’t think we will,” says Jack, nodding towards a peculiar barricade in the distance. “Erms, I wonder what they’re doing?” “Heck! Is there another way?” asks Ervie. “Oh, you idiot!” “Come on Gillian, now’s not the time. Let’s see if we can get through whatever it is.”

We trot up to the blockade and within seconds, two young security guards appear from a nearby van. “You’ll have to turn back, folks,” one of them says, folding his arms in an unnecessarily aggressive manner, instantly riling Gillian. “This is a public right of way, young man, and as a member of the local council, I will not tolerate your impudent manners.” “My what?” “Good heavens. This is exactly the problem with young people of today. They only have a basic grasp of language. Inclusion means...” “Look mate, we need to get through so this lady can get back to her horsebox at the pub before it’s dark,” intercepts Jack. “Mate?” mutters Gillian quietly to herself. “Such appalling diction.”

The other security guard begins talking into her radio. “Sorry, but you’re going to have to move away because the explosives are going to go off soon.” “I can’t believe my ears.” “The what?” “Yeah, they’re filming some explosion thing today because it’s a quiet day. You’ve got seven minutes before it starts.” Jack is horrified. “Blinking back, come on, let’s get out of here!”

“Just a moment, young lady. I refuse to be bullied into leaving a public right of way. Do you have the necessary permission to be setting off explosives in this vicinity?” “I dunno. It’s nothing to do with me. I’m just on security.” The security guard shrugs her shoulders and scratches her head. “Oh, you idiot!” “Come on Gillian, now’s not the time. Let’s get out of here!” Jack turns her horse and we all follow as fast as we can. My heart is beating like a drum and my brain begins firing on all cylinders.

We need to get out of here! Poppy’s going to bolt! Just relax and take a deep breath, commands my sensible self. Relax? Are you insane? Breathe, Grace, breathe!

WWW.YOURHORSE.CO.UK

SHORT STORY

“They haven’t heard the last of this,” Gillian chunter as we hoof it away from the barricade.

KABOOM! “What the hell! That wasn’t seven minutes!” yells Jack. “Whoa! Steady!” Poppy rears, for the first time ever. I grab onto her spine mane as every swear word in my vocabulary tumbles out of my mouth. And then she is off, like a rocket on a hill heading straight towards a PRIVATE, NO ENTRY sign.

My whole body goes into shock as I cling on for dear life and keep repeating “whoa” in a feeble attempt to calm her down. “I shall be bringing this up at the next parish council meeting. Mark my words,” shouts Gillian as she zooms past me on her Thoroughbred, medieval gown flying behind her and the veil on her headpiece flapping like a streamer. The sight and sound of her is so utterly ridiculous that it makes me laugh, instantly calming the down.

Poppy slows into a canter and then settles into a steady trot — and so does everyone else. “Bawses!” Jack fans her face. “Thank goodness we’re all okay.” “Yes, but we’ve just a bit lost now. Where are we?” I look through the falling snow to try to get my bearings. We are in thick pine woodland and it smells delicious. “I think we’re in the private plantation, but I’m sure no one will be here today, so if we’re leaving, we can skirt round and eventually get to the pub,” Gillian replies with authority. “You did wonderfully well, Grace. How do you feel?”

JANUARY 2024 YOUR HORSE 25

SHORT STORY

“Wow, yes, I did, didn’t I? I stayed on!” I feel triumphant to have survived my worst fear. “I’m amazed I stayed on too,” laughs Ervie.

Riding through the private, snowy woodland is a feast for the eyes and I feel incredibly boosted by the realisation that I’d stayed on despite Poppy bolting. We sing a few Christmas carols and Gillian regales us with stories of her farming youth when presently we arrive at a gate. “Ah yes, now I know where we are,” says Gillian. “We need to go through this field and then we’ll be out on the road near the pub.”

She opens the gate and we all trot through. The field is a huge undulating pasture flanked by deciduous woods. Their bare branches create ethereal lace patterns against the cloudy winter sky. The snow is deep in places, so we have to be careful where we ride as the horses keep stumbling. “What’s that over there?” asks Ervie. I squint to see through the snowflakes blurring my vision. That notice horns. My heart misses a beat. “Oh, is that a bull?”

“Yes,” nods Gillian, “and he doesn’t look like the friendliest of fellows.” “Flames of breath swirl from his flaring nostrils.”

“The bull stops dead with a look of confusion on his face. ‘Keep playing the recorder!’”

26 YOUR HORSE JANUARY 2024

“I don’t think he’s liking your headress Gillian,” says Jack. “He’s pawing the ground and snorting. What should we do?” “I don’t know!” “He looks really angry. Should we gallop?” asks Ervie in a quivering voice. “No! He’ll go berserk,” I reply. “His coming over! We’ve got to get out of here!”

My heart is thumping in my ears and a wave of nausea sweeps over me as the powerful bulk of the bull draws ever nearer with a rapid trot. Despite the cold day, I have begun to feel hideously hot with terror. Poppy senses my fear and begins to speed up and prance around. I want to cry, but then a thought pings into my brain. I pull Gillian’s recorder out of my pocket and blow.

“Grace what the hell are you doing?” Jack is horrified. “I’m trying to scare him,” I reason, and then quickly go back to playing. Gillian joins in with some discordant harmonies. “It’s working,” whispers Jack. The bull stops dead with a look of confusion on his face. “Keep playing!”

Despite the fear of death boiling in my veins, I force myself to keep playing. The bull snorts and turns with cat-like alertness that belies his enormous body. “Oh, thank goodness,” cries Ervie as the bull hurries away to the farthest corner of his pasture, snow spraying up from his hooves.

“Oh, thank goodness,” cries Ervie as the bull hurries away to the farthest corner of his pasture, snow spraying up from his hooves.

“Crikey,” says Jack with huge relief as we leave him behind. “Well done Grace for that quick thinking.” The rest of the ride passes without incident. It’s only as I drive home that I feel an enormous sense of achievement. Not only have I battled my fears of riding, I’ve had an adventure that tested every bit of me and I succeeded. I belly laugh like a child. It is the best Christmas present ever.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR
Grace Olson is the author of best-selling equestrian memoirs, The Yard and The Farm, which are available from all UK bookshops and Amazon. She has also written a series of children’s books and is a regular contributor on Channel 5’s The Yorkshire Vet with her flock of therapy sheep. Her dream is to use the income from book sales to enable her to travel freely with ill people at no cost. graceolsonauthor.com

ABOUT THE ILLUSTRATOR
Ruth Buchanan is a full-time artist and author whose work features globally in the private collections of notable names in the arts as well as equestrianism. Visit ruthbuchanan.co.uk

WWW.YOURHORSE.CO.UK

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Best of British, Dec 25

Rhubarb Finds His Family

By Grace Olson, Brown Dog Books, paperback, £9.99

Commencing with the classic opening line: "It was a dark and stormy night...", we are introduced to the world of Rhubarb the sheep, who wonders why he is alone when other young lambs in the barn are being looked after by their mums.

Ignoring the pleas of other, more patient orphan lambs, he asks mums if they would like him as an additional family member. When they say they have their quota, Rhubarb pushes his way out into the world at large, determined to find a mummy.

Guided by the light of the moon, plus a helpful pony and a young girl, our hero wanders the countryside – meeting all kinds of birds and animals before satisfying his inquisitive nature about this Mother Nature that everyone keeps on about.

Anyone with a knowledge of the Channel 5 documentary series The Yorkshire Vet will know that Rhubarb is a real animal, who is learning to be a therapy animal as part of the author's flock to help her do her therapy work at no cost for people on low incomes.

In addition to Grace's lovely story, the artwork by Andrew Prescott adds more magic to this book with a fine attention to detail of many aspects of the countryside. It appears that Rhubarb even managed a ride in a Morris Traveller.

Young readers with a love for animals will enjoy this and further stories about other lovable characters.

Country Smallholder, Dec 25

THE COUNTRY SMALLHOLDER

COUNTRYSIDE CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Group of newly shorn alpacas at Yew Tree Alpacas

Whether you're visiting us in person or browsing online, they think they have something special for everyone on your list.

www.yewtreealpaca.co.uk Tel 01763 848357 email info@yewtreealpaca.co.uk

Exclusive Online Offer – Save 12%! They're delighted to offer their online customers 12% off all purchases made through their website.

Simply enter promo code SMALLHLD_12_31DEC25 at checkout box to claim your discount. Minimum order value: £16 Offer valid until 31st December 2025

ADOPT A GOAT FOR AND CHANGE A LIFE AT CHRISTMAS

Buttercups Sanctuary for Goats was founded in 1989, with the goal of rescuing and rehabilitating goats who have suffered from neglect and abuse. Since then, they have welcomed over a thousand Caprine characters through their gates. Once at Buttercups, they receive the love and care they deserve, and are allowed to heal from wounds both physical and emotional, whilst living out the rest of their days in peace and comfort. As the UK's first charity solely dedicated to goat welfare, the sanctuary is largely dependent on the generosity of their wonderful supporters. One of the ways you can help the work of Buttercups is through donating to their Hay Appeal, which helps to cover the significant cost of hay that it takes to keep our herd well-fed and nicely rounded. Buttercups is also open to visitors year-round and offers a truly unique experience; wander amongst the goats, meet the characters and even have a go at feeding them too. If you wanted to add a little something extra to your visit, you might consider attending on of their additional experiences, which include a Goat Keeper Experience, a Goat Encounter Experience, and a Husbandry Course, which run throughout the year.

Brandy

Dougas

Maggie

You can also sponsor one of their goats; another fantastic way to help! For as little as £20 a year, you can receive an adoption certificate, two photos and a letter from your goat, as well as a subscription to our quarterly newsletter, full of all the latest rescue stories and goaty-antics! A very different Christmas present! Brandy, Douglas and Maggie are just a few of the gorgeous goats who want your support.

All support received is always greatly appreciated by both the charity and the goats themselves – they simply could not do it without you! For more information on Buttercups Sanctuary for Goats, as well as other ways you can support the charity, visit www.buttercups.org.uk.

SHEEP STORIES TO INSPIRE ALL AGES

What can you buy that's meaningful yet inexpensive? Magical stories to empower and grow self-esteem, cleverly woven into the adventures of a flock of sheep – as seen on Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet. Grace Olson originally wrote the books for children aged 5-10 but they have become very popular with adults too. The themes in the book speak to everyone and can help to raise self-worth and change negative thought patterns into powerful, positive ones – all wrapped up in whimsical tales, beautifully illustrated with immersive, watercolour paintings.

- Merlin Finds His Magic teaches that love is a superpower
- Galadhad Finds His Voice teaches that it's ok to be your unique self
- Berel Finds His Wings teaches how to think positively
- Rhubarb Finds His Family teaches unity and that we are all the children of Mother Nature

Grace and her flock of therapy sheep have become regular contributors on The Yorkshire Vet with two fabulous features coming up soon.

Grace Olson filming with the Yorkshire Vet

Grace and friend relax on set

The therapy sheep are centre stage

A great feeder for your barn cats

Keeps your dustbath useable in bad weather

USEFUL, TOUGH AND VERY DIFFERENT

Dust baths are an essential item for good chicken health and with the weather turning wetter, these stylish and robust dust baths from RoostWorks.co.uk are a great way to keep your precious bath mix nice and dry plus reduce holes in your lawn. If you have a friend who has chickens, they will love one of these.

These durable units also make great cat feeders for outdoor cats and goat lick preservers. Designed and made in the UK, they're made from recycled UK plastic and are long-lasting and maintenance-free. To find out more visit RoostWorks.co.uk

STILL THINKING ABOUT SHEEP INSIDE!

Here's the perfect solution to a game that involves all the family. Sheep Dip is a fun filled, family card game for 3-6 players. It is very easy to play, with games usually

Find out more at thecountrysmallholder.com

"I'm not allowed to reveal any details about these next features but they will bring lots of smiles to peoples faces! They were hilarious fun to film and I can't wait to be able to share what we did. My newest sheep, Rhubarb, was so naughty during filming that at one point he knocked the camera off its tripod and then we discovered he'd eaten the wires to the microphones!"

Here's some behind the scenes photos (only the ordinary ones though so as not to give away any secret content!

Grace's big dream is to use the income from book sales to enable her to treat terminally ill people for free. Her books are available from all UK book shops, Amazon and the James Herriot Museum in Thirsk. Please support your local independent bookshop if you can. For more information about the books and her wonderful therapy sheep, visit her website <https://www.graceolsonauthor.com>.

taking no more than 25 to 30 minutes. A game for all ages, it's easy to learn and great fun to play.

The game consists of two packs of cards FLOCK cards and EWE DO cards, plus a playing board.

The FLOCK pack consists of four different breeds of sheep, each with 15 unique characters, there's Hardy Herdwicks, Leggy Leicesters, Sturdy Suffolks and Bonnie Blackfaces. There are 71 illustrated Flock cards including a few Wild Cards and some Sheepdogs to help protect your flock and one very special Rainbow Sheep, hang on to it if you can!

The 45 EWE DO cards guarantee to make each game different, players can lose sheep to Rustlers and the Wolf or when they leave their Gate Open and everyone can add to their flock at a Sheep Dip or on Market Day. Playing the game couldn't be easier. Players are dealt five FLOCK cards each, face up and the object of the game is

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

SixtyPlus Surfers, Nov 2025

Article by Grace Olson, The Yorkshire Vet star, sheep therapist and bestselling children's author

Winter can often be a difficult time for people because of the long, dark nights and abysmal weather. So, what can we do to make ourselves feel better? Well, for me the answer is always my pets and I am very fortunate to have quite a menagerie. Let me introduce you to my unusual and wonderful four-legged therapists...

Merlin, Galahad, Lancelot, Berel, Teddy and Rhubarb are my beloved pet sheep and they bring tremendous joy to a lot of people. You may have seen them on Channel 5's popular documentary series, The Yorkshire Vet, where they have become regular contributors thanks to their adorable personalities.

Sheep came into my life by accident. There I was, happily enjoying life as a therapist working with horses when suddenly someone told me about an orphan lamb who needed a home. I am a bit of a soft touch for a sad story so the little lamb ended up coming to live with me along with another random lamb that the farmer needed to rehome. These young lambs absolutely blew my mind!

Like most people, my experience of sheep were 'blobs of cotton-wool that lived in fields and they all looked the same and they weren't friendly animals'. So, you can imagine my surprise when these two lambs turned out to be more like dogs than – well – dogs! They were so loving, playful and interested in everything I was doing and eventually, their interest extended into my work.

One day, a lady came for some equine assisted therapy and as she was telling me about her grief, Merlin the lamb trotted over and pushed himself into her knees. The lady couldn't believe what was happening and she bent down to cuddle him and laughed her head off.

It was incredible to witness the joy she felt simply by cuddling Merlin. She found it so magical and amusing that a sheep would want such attention. That was the beginning of sheep therapy. From then on, whenever I was working, the sheep insisted on being part of it and that's how I ended up with a flock of six woolly therapists.

Just being with or near sheep can lower your blood pressure and calm your nervous system. They literally resonate relaxation. So, with that in mind, I would like to invite you to wrap up warm, get your boots on and go outside. Even if it's grey, miserable, damp weather. Go outside and get into the countryside. If you have a car, drive. If not, get on a bus that goes to farming country and find some walks.

You won't be able to get physically close to commercial flocks of sheep but you'll be able to see them and hear them and this will have such a powerful impact on your central nervous system. Stop and observe them. Listen to them calling out to each other.

Listen to the birds, the wind, the insects. Breathe deeply and allow a deeper part of you to connect with it all. Some sheep are very inquisitive and they may come over to observe you and 'chat' with you.

And if there are no sheep, you can do all of this near fields of cows. Just listen, watch them, breathe in the country air. Allow it to soothe away your Winter blues. You will return home feeling much happier than you did before you ventured out.

As an extension of my therapy work, I have written two memoirs about the healing power of horses – they are heartwarming, hilarious and deeply moving. I have also written a series of sheep-themed stories.

The sheepy stories, although officially for children, are loved by adults too. They are empowering, uplifting and transformative and they are beautifully illustrated with immersive watercolours. I was so lucky to have the book launch for my first sheepy book filmed for The Yorkshire Vet.

If you'd like to see comical videos of me singing to my cuddly sheep, you can find links on my website – it should give you a good laugh!

Sunday Express, Aug 2025

38 SUNDAY EXPRESS August 3, 2025

BUSHELL ON THE BOX with GARRY BUSHELL

MY TV LIFE

Grace Olson

TV's The Yorkshire Vet regular Grace Olson, 51, is a sheep therapist and best-selling children's author.

What was your first TV memory?
Animal Magic with Johnny Morris. I blame him for me having conversations with my sheep. I pretend they're talking to me. They all have different accents. Merlin is potty-mouthed, he's always swearing.

What was your first TV appearance?
BBC local news when I first got pet lambs because of an emotional backstory. I'm only on TV now because of Merlin.

Who was your first TV crush?
It's embarrassing! It was Pierce Dinsdale in Home To Roost. I don't normally fancy someone unless I know them, but there was something mesmerizing about him. He was a bad boy, always falling out with his dad.

What is your favourite current show?
The Yorkshire Vet. That's true, it's not just a plug. I loved it from the start, before I was on it. I've always loved animals.

Which TV show would you take to a desert island?
Ghosts - It's hilarious. It made me want to be there with them. Brilliantly done. I tried and failed to like the US version - it's unbearable.

What TV show would you like to put out of its misery?
Soap operas, they're a cringey abomination. I blame them for the demise of society. They're all fighting, drugs and horribleness.

Guiltiest TV pleasure?
I love watching 22 Kids & Counting. She had her first at 14 and never stopped. How do you do all that washing?

What are you up to at the moment?
I've just published my new beautifully illustrated children's book Rhubarb. It's about sheep, but the purpose is to make children realise we're all related.

● Rhubarb Finds His Family by Grace Olson (£9.99, Brown Dog Books) is out now.

GARRY BUSHELL

Euro mystery tour is a lavish let-down

ABUS load of blinkered people who don't have a clue where they're going... BBC1's Destination X could be a perfect metaphor for the Corporation itself. Their latest reality game show sells itself as Race Across The World meets The Traitors. It's more like Coach Trip meets Ted Rogers' 3-2-1, in an eclipse. The show is duller than a bowl of quinoa. There's little scenery, the rules are convoluted, the clues are misleading and there is zero plotting. Wearing hi-tech blindfolds when outside, the contestants are driven around Europe in a coach with blacked-out windows. Even likeable games-master Rob Brydon comes lumbered with a lame script (and publicly-funded Alan Partridge blazers). The over-priced fiasco began in a fab airport with 13 contestants immediately whittled down to ten, Traitors-style. Sadly, the ten included time-wasting Mabel who soon decided it was time to 'go home...see my family...have a home-cooked meal'. Later the contestants, confined to a box in a town square, were asked questions about the country they're in. Except they didn't know where they were, or if their guessed answers were correct. Two emerged to meet a woman speaking a language that wasn't French or German, which convinced crime author Deborah they were heading to Vienna. Where they speak German. The Alsatian dog clue was helpful if you knew German shepherds were re-named after Alsace. Others included 99 Red Ballroom (Berlin), tulips (Amsterdam) and a St Bernard (the Alps). They'd have needed eagle eyes to spot the 'fools' lurking into Persian cakes. What a waste of our money. Channel 4's four-part docu-drama Operation Dark Phone: Murder By Text was a terrifying reminder that cops have more to worry about than tweets that upset MPs. In 2020, French police hacked EncroChat, a global encrypted phone network used for drug trafficking and arms-dealing. It was known as 'the LinkedIn of organised crime'. Message exchanges provided chilling insights into the minds of modern villains. Police access lasted for just 74 days, but that was long enough for the UK's National Crime Agency to work out the identity and location of a character codenamed 'Live-long'. He was organising brutal hits - 'kick his hands...face...15K' - and gun-running. Thankfully, vanity would prove to be his downfall. When he wasn't orchestrating appalling crimes, he treated EncroChat like Instagram. He sent a selfie showing his face and then the view from his hotel room - enough for investigators to work out who he was and where in Barcelona he was holed up. Many user handles sounded like nicknames from The Mighty Boosh - Mystic-steak, Tubby-tem, Bull-nifor, Luxury-balloon... the latter was a cocaine supplier based in Spain who paid Dutch socio-paths to build torture chambers - 'operating theatres' - inside sound-proofed shipping containers in order to inflict terrible pain on AI, a man he believed had ripped him off for millions. Underworld slang abounded. 'Wedding cake' was cocaine, 'piss-pyrite' was a grenade, 'metal' and 'heavy tools' were guns, 'sweets' were bullets etcetera. Sadly, a corrupt Cheshire Police employee revealed all to a villain's girlfriend. Yet NCA data suggests the seven-week operation led to more than 2,300 convictions, and the seizure of huge quantities of narcotics, 175 guns and £3.5million in dirty cash. Keeley Hawes plays Julie, a had-her-peep middle-aged hitwoman lured out of retirement. Her nervy journalist son Edward duhs her 'a perimeter-assual James Bond' - think Killing Eve on HRT. The son moans constantly and insists on having needy conversations in the middle of life-threatening situations like nobody in real life ever would. 'Don't you two ever shut up!' asked a casualty, channelling viewers' pain.

THE NINJA and the Whinger were sucked into a series of unlikely situations. Ed's hot girlfriend Kayla was the daughter of Aaron Stone, a grumpy billionaire with a dark secret - he'd borrowed money from arms dealer Jean Luc Bertrand to set up the family firm, then commissioned an assassin to blow him away. The killer was Julie. And Jean Luc was... Edward's real father using a surrogate mum. Julie just rescued and raised him. Neglectfully. The action scenes are lively enough to distract from the improbability of the coincidence-laden script. And I'm still not entirely sure why Jean Luc's widow Marie slept with Aaron's idiot son Ezra and poisoned Edward. Written by Harry and Jack Williams, the Prime Six parter is a gruesome slaughter-fest leavened with dry comedy. Marie's hitmen wipe out a Greek village, an IT wiz in a Libyan prison has four fingers chopped off and tries to blackmail Cross, seeing his fate. Ezra, on loan from Love Island, ends up killing his old man, and the big clue 'Chantain' (French marmalade) was a red herring. Nice yacht though. The best drama all week was sporting - the British & Irish Lions pulled off the greatest comeback since Lazarus against the Wallabies. England's footballing women also excelled.

X MARKS THE SPOT: Rob Brydon presenting Destination X

TARGET: Keeley Hawes and Edward Dubs were in The Assassin

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Yorkshire Life, June 2025

THERAPY SHEEP

Grace's ANIMAL MAGIC

Therapist GRACE OLSON's flock of sheep inspired her to write a series of children's books to boost mental health with a message of hope and positivity

WORDS: Emma Clayton
PHOTOS: Pooch and Pooch Photography

It's like he's reading your soul. He looks in to the eye and if you feeling low he comforts me. He's so intuitive.

You might expect such words about a loyal dog, maybe, but Grace Olson is describing her beloved three-year-old sheep, Merlin.

Grace got Merlin to get out of weeds in her field, where she keeps her horses. Someone said: "Have you got room for a sheep?" I got two instantly. They turned out to be the most incredible, awesome, intelligent animals, she says.

Now Grace has six sheep, each with their own personalities, and she runs sheep and horse therapy sessions to help people with mental illness and mental health problems. Merlin and his woolly pals, who are regulars with Grace on Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet, inspired her to write a series of children's books. The author and therapist does regular talks about her books and how they can help strengthen the mental health of children. Each book, about her therapy sheep, has a message of hope and positivity.

Grace, 36, from Leeds, had depression as a child. Through fable-style storytelling, she helps children learn how to take control of their thoughts, navigate complex emotions and understand themselves better.

"My intention was to write a children's book about Merlin. While I was writing it the story became much more meaningful – it inspired me," says Grace. "It was funny and fun too. I thought I could help children understand their minds better. It was like an epiphany."

"I suffered severe depression as a child and stopped suddenly when I was a teenager. Teen

July 2025 227

THERAPY SHEEP

'Once they got over their trauma they became such SENSITIVE, GENTLE ANIMALS. They feel more than any human'

...wishes have risen drastically. We cannot underestimate the power of self-awareness from a young age, and the importance of helping children with low self-esteem cope with today's world. I was bullied at school, but at home I was safe. Now children who are bullied can't get away from it. There was no social media when I was growing up. Today young people are under so much pressure from images and content online."

Adds Grace: "The pressure about people understanding that we don't have to be victims of our negative thought patterns... we can learn to change how we think. I believe I loved horses as a child. I had enjoyed riding when I was 16."

Grace started riding again as a farm in Wales and says it "completely transformed her." They used horses to interact with me, it was phenomenal," she recalls. "They said: 'Pick a horse you don't like the look of.' There was one I was a bit scared of. He came over and put his nose on my hand. I started crying. All my misery and despair came out, and somehow I found a bit of peace. Being with horses healed me."

Grace bought a tractor horse, Pippa, in Wales and later bought her, she's aware children need to learn from an early age that they can be the master of their minds. It's important to learn how to think wisely, with awareness. And that needs to start as soon as possible."

Grace started doing massage 30 years ago and never trained in writing fiction. She started writing a memoir in lockdown. "I'd always loved writing. I used to be in a band and write the lyrics. Lockdown gave me time to sit and write, which was therapeutic," she says. She wrote four books. The Bard and the Farm, inspired by the horses, which had helped her recover from postnatal depression. "I had an emergency caesarean and the anaesthetic went off. Nobody listened to me. It was traumatic," she says. "Through my massage work, I met an amazing show jumper and was reminded of how much acquired two more great horses, Belle and Fred, a shire horse, and is now a qualified HLM coach with horses. "Pippa was injured and so traumatised she wouldn't use a bit. Belle was badly injured. I've done leading with them and now they're leaders," says Grace. "Once they got over their trauma they became such sensitive, gentle animals. They feel more than any human."

Grace with Julian Norton, The Yorkshire Vet

Grace was her sheep – Merlin, Gabriel, Lancelot, Teddy, Bert and Rhubarb – also have intuition and healing powers. "A woman came to see me, her husband had died and she was very depressed. I took her into the field and Merlin approached her. He wanted a cuddle so she better down. Suddenly she started laughing. She said she hadn't laughed for a year," says Grace. "Being with sheep is a sensory experience; touching the

where: Grace with Julian Norton, The Yorkshire Vet
Photo: James
Pippa: Grace has six sheep, each with their own personality
Belle: Grace with Belle, her rescue horse from Hope Pastures

Grace with Belle, her rescue horse from Hope Pastures wood. These wonderful animals are healers. My sheep and horses are home in the field, we don't have them to come to people. We walk around chatting and they join us. It happens organically."

It was Merlin who led Grace to The Yorkshire Vet. "Someone I know said they knew the director, so by the end of the week I was on the programme with Merlin, who was trained for me by infection. We've been on it a few times. I love it."

Grace's first children's book was Merlin Finds His Magic. Now she's written three sheep books, with the fourth, Rhubarb Finds His Family, just published. "Rhubarb came to me as an orphan lamb. It's about his search for a mother, and how we all have Mother Nature in our lives," says Grace. "It's joyful to have my sheep in my books – they deserve it."

Beautifully illustrated by Andrew Prescott - His watercolours make the books so magical and immersive," says Grace - the stories are aimed at parents too. "I wanted to write something that parents can talk to kids about, to encourage them to share feelings. I had lovely messages from parents. I visit schools with my books, and I also talk to parents and carers, looking at the deeper meaning of my books and the importance of children taking control of their own mental health."

Grace also works with terminally ill patients and says it's a privilege to spend time with people at the end of life. "We have very meaningful conversations. They have taught me a lot," she says. "My last plan is to have a therapy farm with sheep, horses and cows, for people with a range of needs." Vet.graceolsonauthor.com

July 2025

July 2025 229

Kindred Spirit Magazine, May 2025

KINDREDSPIRIT | PERSONAL STORY

From healing with animals to inspiring young readers: Grace Olson pictured with TV vet Julian Norton, her animal companions, and children's book Merlin Findi Hi Magic

HOW ANIMALS HELPED ME HEAL

After a traumatic birth left her with PTSD and postnatal depression, Grace Olson discovered profound healing through horses – and now supports others with the help of her own herd

Following the traumatic birth of my daughter, which resulted in an emergency caesarean section without enough anaesthetic, I was plunged into PTSD and postnatal depression. It was a truly hideous time.

Although I was able to do all the practical day-to-day things to care for my first (and last) baby, I was unable to feel the love that everyone talks about when they become mothers. I believed I was a terrible mum, comparing myself to other mums who seemed to genuinely enjoy their babies. For me, every day was a heavy struggle.

It was then that fate brought me a breath of fresh air in the form of a passionate show jumper. I was a masseuse, so she came to me for treatments, and every week she would regale me with hilarious stories of her horsey life at the livery yard. Her tales reminded me of the many happy days I had spent at the riding school when I was young, and eventually, it occurred to me that maybe I'd went back to horses, I might feel happy again.

By now, my daughter was four years old, and I had more time to myself while she was at nursery school. So I plucked up the courage to book a lesson. The universe brought me a wonderful riding instructor who was full of fun, and he helped me to slowly rebuild my self-confidence. After a few months of lessons, the magic of life brought me to the next step in my healing process. This time it came in the form of a rather peculiar woman who asked me to help her. She had bought a new horse but was too scared to ride him.

This horse was the first of a string of horses who presented me with various challenges, in which I had to dig deep strength. Slowly, slowly, I was reminded of who I had been before the traumatic birth, and who I was meant to become.

A HEART-HEALING ENCOUNTER

Eventually life led me to a remote mountain farm in Wales, where I was under the impression I was simply going to learn how to use a particular type of bridle – a gentler bridle that didn't involve placing metal in the horse's mouth. But I was in for a very big surprise. The ladies who lived there could clearly see that I was still suffering from emotional trauma. They led me up to their fields, where horses ran free, and there began the most incredible experience.

"Pick a few you like the look of", they said. I chose a few small ponies who reminded me of my happy childhood days at the riding school. They brought the ponies over and I enjoyed interacting with them.

"Now, pick one you don't like". I wasn't expecting this strange request. I automatically chose a very large sports horse who filled me with fear beyond reason.

One of the ladies went to collect him and brought him to me. He looked me in the eye and then put his nose on my heart. Tears immediately poured down my cheeks.

"He's letting you know you don't need to be afraid", said the lady, as I dissolved into sobs. "What are you thinking?" she asked.

"I'm thinking about what a terrible mother I am", I replied. Then it all poured out in a jumble of guilt and sorrow. All the expectations I'd had about motherhood, and what the reality had been like.

The large sports horse curved his massive neck around me, which felt like a hug, and I cried from the depths of my soul as he stood quietly, waiting for it all to release.

It was in this unspoken conversation that I realised that I hadn't been a bad mother. Guilt was unnecessary. I had been able to put my daughter first despite being so traumatised, and what's more, I had done it all alone. Unlike all my friends, my husband worked very long hours, so I had done all the mothering without his help. I had been a superb mother.

Finally, I was free! The sadness had disappeared and tremendous happiness filled the space as I realised how far I had come in my own life journey. Thanks to this horse, the relationship with my daughter blossomed into deep love.

NEW PASTURES

I was already a qualified massage therapist with experience of working with terminally ill people, and now I was ready to take my therapy work to the next level. I got my own horse, rented a field and had the use of a few of my friends' horses as we all shared the land. The next step was to gain a professional qualification in coaching and mentoring, which included working with horses to assist the coaching process. I then wrote a book about my healing journey, The Yard: How A Horse Healed My Heart, which became an instant bestseller and has helped transform the lives of many other people.

Life hadn't finished with me yet, though. I was randomly offered a couple of pet lambs who needed a home, and my gut feeling told me to take them. I initially thought they'd be useful in keeping the weeds down in our field, but they soon showed me their higher purpose. I was stunned when I discovered how loving and fun they were. They were more affectionate than most dogs!

PERSONAL STORY | KINDREDSPIRIT

That wasn't all. It was during an equine therapy session with a traumatised lady when Merlin, one of the sheep, decided he was going to be the therapist that day. He trotted over to her and pushed himself into her knees. She bent down, cuddled him, and laughed for the first time in over a year. Just cuddling Merlin lifted her spirit, calmed her nervous system and helped to switch her brain into recovery mode.

Since then I have acquired a small flock of sheep, and they each have a wonderful ability of connecting with broken souls to help them find inner strength and rebalance themselves. All they do is stand quietly with the person and resonate calmness and love. What fascinates me the most is how they know when someone is there for healing and when someone is just a friend of mine coming to visit. They are so gentle with people in need, yet with my friends, they are very cheeky and boisterous.

My therapy sheep have found fame on Channel 5's popular documentary series, The Yorkshire Vet, and they are also the subjects of a series of beautifully illustrated fable-style children's books. Each tale is filled with positive messages of how we can make our lives joyful. My aim is to help young minds grow into happy adults through the magic of empowering stories. I hope one day to be able to use the proceeds from book sales as an income so that I can treat terminally ill people for free. •

Find out more...

• Grace Olson is an author, therapist and animal lover based in Leeds, West Yorkshire. With her therapy sheep, she has featured on Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet.
• graceolsonauthor.com

PEFC Certified Paper

www.kindredspirit.co.uk | 57

Telegraph & Argus, May 2025

PAGE 30

COMMENT & ANALYSIS

Discover who's saying what @ telegraphandargus.co.uk

Monday, May 19, 2025

SHEEP BRING JOY TO THOSE IN DESPAIR

GRACE OLSON - therapist and author - shares the magic of sheep therapy

"WHAT on earth is sheep therapy?" I got asked this question a lot and it's a tough one to answer. So, I'll start at the beginning of this unusual work. I can now summarise it. Many years ago, I suffered from postnatal depression and an attempt to feel better, I went back to horse riding. I'd loved my riding lessons as a youngster and knew this was the tonic I needed. I was right. Being outside with horses helped me massively and then I accidentally ended up receiving a therapy session which involved horses. It was mind-blowing. The interaction between myself and the horse was more effective than any human therapist could ever be. I decided to explore this more and eventually I became a certified ILM level 2 equine-assisted coach and set up my practice in Ecop, West Yorkshire. I was already a qualified massage therapist and had been treating people with life-threatening illnesses for many years so I was used to being with people who were deeply suffering.

Grace with Merlin (looking at camera) and some of her other sheep. Image: Pooch and Ponies. Left: Merlin during an emotional therapy session with a grieving mother

Telegraph & Argus
The West Wing, The New Hall, Newhall Way, Bradford BD5 8FF. Established 1866

COMPLAINTS POLICY

The T&A is regulated by the Independent Press Standards Organisation and we seek to abide by the Editors' Code which is enforced by IPSO. The Code is available at http://www.editorcode.org.uk/the_code.php. Details of IPSO can be found at <http://www.ipso.co.uk>.

Complaints and requests for editorial corrections or clarifications should be referred to the Editor or the first instance, who can be contacted as follows: complaints@telegraphandargus.co.uk. It is essential that your email is headed "Complaint" in the subject line and contains the following information:

- Your name, postal address, email address and telephone number.
- Title of the publication concerned;
- Date of publication;
- Page number or website page address (or a copy of the story); and
- Details of the complaint.

We may ask for more detail, but once the full details have been established, we will try to resolve any complaint brought under the Editors' Code within 28 days. If you are dissatisfied with our answer, you may then refer the matter to IPSO.

For complaints about non-editorial third party comments on website articles you should always use the "report this post" function next to the comment.

One day, I was offered a couple of young sheep who had been bottle-fed and reared at home. Without much thought, I said "Yes". I had absolutely no experience of sheep in all so it was a steep learning curve. But the thing that surprised me the most was how friendly they were. They were more like dogs than any dog I'd met - playful, cuddly and very impulsive. It was a sunny afternoon when a very depressed lady came for a horse therapy session. The horses were grazing and Merlin, the sheep, was watching. He watched with great intensity as the lady talked to me about her sadness. Suddenly, Merlin marched over to the woman and he crunched himself into her knees which made her bend down to greet him with surprise. She gave him a cuddle and laughed at how comical he was. She hadn't laughed in over a year. Merlin stayed with her for a considerable amount of time and the lady ended up roaring with laughter. She left feeling better than ever and I was left feeling absolutely stunned. Merlin seemed to smile as he walked casually away back to his dinner. Over the course of a couple of months, Merlin grew in confidence and was always the first animal to choose to engage with anyone who visited our field. All my animals are horse, none of them are forced to do the therapy work. The process happens in an organic way. So, what actually happens in a sheep therapy session? Well, it's different for each person but generally how it works is this... The person arrives feeling horrendous. Often, it's a combination of fear of their illness, sadness, anger and grief. We walk around the field and I listen as they talk. Eventually, one or more of the sheep will come and join us on our walk and they'll offer themselves very physically to the person. This is such an unusual experience that it brings great joy to the situation. All the senses are engaged and focussed on the sheep - how woolly they feel, how wonderful they smell, how huge they are to cuddle. Sheep are very laid-back and this triggers deep relaxation in the person who is with them - this is a result of mirror neurones in our brains which help to switch our nervous system into chill-out mode. After a while we sit down on low stools so it's easier to cuddle the sheep and by now, the person is feeling so liberated that everything they need to say can be said. I have learned how to listen deeply and ask questions to help people dive deeply into their subconscious to unearth the hidden stresses that may be causing their symptoms to be worse. We all carry various sadnesses from life experiences that can enter if left inside to rot. Talking about things in a non-judgemental, constructive way can help to lessen the severity of physical illness. In this way of freeing up the heart from its burden of sorrow, people can get the best results out of their medical treatments and live longer and happier lives. My wonderful sheep have shared several times on channel 5's Yorkshire Vet and I have also written several books about my animals - some are for children and some are for adults. These books are full of valuable life lessons written in a fun way so they're very easy to read and absorb. They are an extension of my therapy work and my wish is to one day be able to earn my income from book sales so that I can treat terminally ill people for free. Here is my website for more details: graceolsonauthor.com

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Weekend Magazine Front Cover, April 2025

Living North Magazine, April 2025

'It's like they know which sheep is the right one for a job'

Creature Comfort

Author and therapist Grace Olson's pet sheep are changing lives. Grace shares the healing powers of animals, and her own inspiring story, with Living North

You might've spotted Grace, a mum from Leeds, on Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet with her therapy sheep, including three Clun Forest and one blue Texel, on her farm in Easingwold. She's also a best-selling author and her goal is to use the income from book sales to help people find inner peace with her horses and sheep, for free.

Grace herself has experienced mental health issues and depression since the age of five, and attempted suicide when she was 14. She started horse riding as a child. 'I think it's in your blood,' Grace says. 'My mother really loved horses and she probably first took my sister and I riding when I was three or four. We'd always go riding as a family in the summer holidays. Even my dad used to ride.'

'It was when I became a mother myself that I got back into it because I had such hideous post-natal depression. I just needed to feel better, and horses were always the thing that made me happy. I got back into riding and it was transformative.'

Grace began practising massage therapy, and later began treating people with cancer with a specific treatment called lymphatic drainage massage. 'But when the horses healed my post-natal depression, I realised there was something in it,' she says. 'By that time I had my own horses so I got a qualification to do equine-facilitated coaching.'

Grace's therapy sheep came into her life by accident. 'I was offered a couple of sheep as pets that'd been bottle fed,' she says. 'Because we have so many hideous weeds in our field, I thought they'll eat the weeds that the horses don't eat so I essentially got them as lawn mowers, but I was not expecting them to be like dogs! They're so loving and that was really, really surprising. A lady came for some equine therapy a year after her husband had died from a heart attack and she was in shock and depressed. Merlin, one of my sheep, looked at her and you could imagine him thinking 'I can do better than those horses'. He walked up to her and pushed his body into her so she had to bend down. She gave him a cuddle and just laughed. That comedic moment of cuddling a sheep made me realise how awesome sheep are. 'When I do my therapy I don't put a head collar on a horse. They're out there in the field and it's very free and I allow the animals to make their own decision whether they want to get involved or not.' Grace's sheep roam free in the field too. 'It's like they know which sheep is the right one for a job,' she laughs.

Grace has researched the science behind this, and found that some studies show that they can regulate our nervous system. 'There's an unusual factor of cuddling an animal that you can't normally get near to,' she explains. 'People expect to be able to touch a horse but nobody expects to be able to touch a sheep. It's a massive sensory thing, especially with the density and smell of the wool.'

Sheep are either eating or chewing the cud and Grace explains how this interaction with them activates our parasympathetic nervous system. 'In every mammal's brain we have things called mirror neurons and they mirror the animal that's nearest to us. If you're near someone who's really chilled out and relaxed, your brain will put you in a relaxed mode as well and when you're in that relaxed mode, that's when your body can heal itself. It's a real thing that happens, not just a load of whimsical nonsense.'

Grace and her sheep have appeared on The Yorkshire Vet and Julian Norton has treated the sheep, and even meditated with Merlin. 'It's helped me share more about what I'm doing too,' she adds. 'How lucky is that? I'm a self-published author and they filmed my book launch.'

'If we can help children to believe that they are in control of their story, and that they can make their life happy, that's programmed in there before their hormones kick in as a teenager'

Grace began writing in lockdown, posting short stories on Facebook when she couldn't do her close-contact therapy work. Her followers soon asked for a book, and her debut novel, The Yard - How A Horse Healed My Heart, became a number one best-seller on Amazon. 'When I appeared on The Yorkshire Vet, I thought it would be a good idea to write a children's book about my sheep,' explains Grace. 'What happened when I actually started writing the story was that a deeper story came through - it was so meaningful and positive.'

'I could see why I had written these books. I'm a very sensitive person and I can use it to my advantage now that I'm older, but when you're little you're completely at the victim of your emotions and your brain. I was depressed and suicidal at a very young age but if I'd been taught as a youngster that I could control the thoughts in my head, things might have been different.

'If we can help children to believe that they are in control of their story, and that they can make their life happy, that's programmed in there before their hormones kick in as a teenager. These books I've written are cute stories that are beautifully illustrated but their meaning is so important. Each one has a different meaning that I really feel will stand a child in good stead. It's like this is an extension of my therapy work because I can only treat one person at a time, but a book can help endless amounts of people.'

Grace's books and more information about her animals and therapy can be found at graceolsonauthor.com.

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Young Stock Magazine, Spring 2025

Cultivating our future farmers

YOUNG STOCK

Meet the Author
Grace Olson
Merlin finds his Magic

- Mud Mud Magical Mud!
- Learn about our ancient hedgerows
- Farming in Ireland

Welcome to Drayne's Farm
The home of happy cows and tasty wholesome dairy products

Spring time Animal facts!
... and much more farming fun inside!

Meet the Author Grace Olson Merlin finds his Magic

Merlin Finds His Magic by Grace Olson is a captivating story about Merlin's journey of self-discovery, where he learns to embrace his hidden powers and the responsibility that comes with them.

Have you always wanted to be a children's author?

No, it happened by accident! I was avoiding editing a novel because I was being a bit lazy. So I decided I'd have a go at writing a children's book just to see if I could do it!

What part of the book was the most fun to write?

All of it! I absolutely love writing children's books because you can let your imagination run wild. Children are magical so writing books for them ignites a magic in me.

Are any of the books you write inspired from your own childhood or own experiences?

My two memoir-novels, The Yard and The Farm, are all about my life experiences (with a tiny bit of fiction added but not much). My sheepy children's books are very much based on the lives and experiences of my real pet sheep and their unique personalities.

When you begin writing do you know what the ending will be?

No, it always surprises me how my books end! I always say 'Wow I didn't see that coming!'

How do you channel your inner child to write your stories?

This is a wonderful question. When I write I feel that I am channeling from something external. Like the words come through from somewhere else. However, my inner child did help write my book, The Farm, and it happened without me trying. Like it was already there ready to come out.

Approximately how long does it take to complete one of your books?

Another great question! It takes a couple of months to write and edit the children's books. It's important to let ideas bubble and grow and change. It took two years to write and edit each of the big books. They're over 95,000 words so it's a lot of work and I don't like to rush because I want to create something that will be meaningful for people to read.

Finally, please can you share how your sheep are regulars on The Yorkshire Vet?

Merlin was the first of my sheep to be featured on The Yorkshire Vet and he was filmed doing an agility course with Julian the vet. My sheep do therapy work so they have also been filmed doing their healing work. The best thing ever was when my book launch for Merlin Finds His Magic was featured on The Yorkshire Vet!

Competition Time!

We have two copies of Merlin finds his Magic to give away! To enter answer this question

How many words are in the book?

Email your answers by 15th April to susannah.theyoungstock@gmail.com

Good luck!

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

The People's Friend Magazine, March 2025

Country Smallholder
February 2025

THE COUNTRY
SMALLHOLDER

XXXXXXXXXX

Share in the therapy sheep experience

The chance to win one of ten books in a series designed to empower young minds where 'Merlin finds his magic'

Grace and her sheep

Regular readers of The Country Smallholder magazine may recall the enigmatic therapy sheep who have been featured previously. The small flock of unusual sheep have since made a big name for themselves on the popular channel 5 programme, The Yorkshire Vet and as a result, their keeper, Grace Olson, has written a series of books about them.

'Being on the television was such an amazing opportunity to show people how versatile sheep can be. For centuries they have provided mankind with wool and meat but for me, they offer a different dimension which was completely unexpected.'

Grace explained how she had originally taken on the sheep mainly to keep the weeds down in her horse pasture and had planned to spin their wool to make blankets.

TAKING PART IN 'THE YORKSHIRE VET' ON TELEVISION

'But they revealed a depth of character that really surprised me and they became very effective therapy animals. When I was invited to take part in The Yorkshire Vet it was wonderful to see the response from viewers. People found me via social media and messaged to say how fascinating it was to see the work my sheep do.'

Grace's sheep provide comfort for people

Grace's sheep provide comfort for people suffering deep despair but they can only treat one person at a time. It was this realisation that triggered Grace, already a successfully published memoir author, to write children's stories so that her magical sheep could reach more people.

'My aim is to help young minds grow into happy adults through the magic of empowering stories. Each book is a whimsical tale featuring my individual sheep and their unique personalities. They are fun but have a poignant message which will help children to see what really matters in life. The stories will help them to feel brave enough to be the best that they can be when faced with challenges, and embrace their authentic selves,' says Grace.

The books are enhanced by beautiful, watercolour illustrations by the artist Andrew Prescott, and are reminiscent of classic tales such as Peter Rabbit, The Wind In The Willows and Winnie The Pooh.

IT'S NOT ONLY CHILDREN THAT LOVE THE BOOKS

When the first story, Merlin Finds His Magic, was published, Grace was so astonished by the volume of positive messages from readers that it spurred her on to publish a second book, Galahad Finds His Voice sold out on Amazon the first day of publication.

'What has amazed me the most is that loads of adults have bought the books for themselves and find them to be very therapeutic. It's been quite emotional to have received such tremendous feedback.'

The third in the series, Berel Finds His Wings, is due to be published on March 3rd and is the tale of a little lamb with low self-esteem. He is presented with a terrific challenge in which he has to dig deep and harness the power of his mind in order to succeed. It's a very beautiful and empowering story.

There will be one more sheepy story published later this year, entitled Rhubarb Finds His Family. This is a tale about discovering how we are all part of one big family called Mother Nature.

Win this book

Grace is offering 10 readers of The Country Smallholder the chance to win a signed copy of the first in the series, Merlin Finds His Magic. To enter simply scan the QR code or head to <https://bit.ly/3EzkkZG>

Check out more on Grace on graceolsonauthor.com

Country Living, Feb 2025

WELLBEING

MY NATURE FIX

Continuing our series on the healing powers of green spaces

This month: Grace Olson had a major mental health crisis at just 15. It sparked an extraordinary insight into the healing power of animals – and a new vocation as a “sheep therapist”

It's hard being an empty nester but my pet sheep help me cope. They're my forever children and fill the gap while my daughter is at university. I've got five sheep, including three Clan Forest and one Blue Tassel, and keep them on a farm in Eccles, just outside Leeds, where I live. Like dogs, they have distinct personalities. Merlin is especially funny and Galahad is the coddle king.

Whenever I'm having a difficult time, I'll go to the field to be with them. They're such heart healers and have become an invaluable part of my work as a therapist.

Sheep came into my life by accident. I'd been working as an equine-facilitated coach, using horses to help people open up, and a friend told me about two sheep needing a home. I took them on, but immediately wondered what I'd let myself in for – they can be hard work. Yet as we spent time together, I started to understand them. They're such calm, peaceful and intelligent creatures.

Studies show they can regulate our nervous system. Interacting with their pacifist nature can parry our hectic nervous system, the network of nerves that helps us relax. Just watching them chewing the cud is meditative. I can really relate to the shepherd who of yesteryear who lived with his flocks.

Animals have always been important to me. We didn't have much money when we were growing up, but my mum saved enough so my older sister and I could have riding lessons. She had loved helping out at her local stables when she was young and wanted to pass on her passion to us. I started riding when I was five and they were my happiest childhood memories. When I was on the horse, I was in the moment, not thinking about anything else. It was joyous.

In my darkest hour, riding pulled me through. I was badly bullied when I was young, but never had the power to tell my bully to leave

countryliving.com/uk

APRIL 2025 147

WELLBEING

My sheep have helped people feel happier at the worst time of their lives me alone. I didn't talk to my family about what was happening and when I was 15, I tried to take my own life. But I realised in that moment that I wanted to live and started the road to recovery.

I hadn't ridden for a while, but a local friend let me use their retired racehorse, Tommy. He was such a character and we rode around the countryside having amazing adventures. It was so freeing. There was no sadness, just happiness in my heart.

These memories changed the course of my life. I'd always assumed I'd have a textbook birth. Instead, it was complicated and I suffered badly from postnatal depression. I thought back to the wonderful times I'd had with Tommy and knew I had to reconnect with nature.

Once again, I turned to horses. I cantered through ancient woods, past old flax mills and over bubbling streams. Horses are big packets of healing and I soon felt like myself again. I knew then that animals had to be part of my work.

My sheep have helped people feel happier at the worst time of their lives. One lady came to be with the horses after losing her husband, but Merlin marched over to her instead. She gave him a hug and laughed for the first time in a year. It's amazing to watch moments like that. I've helped people overcome illnesses, deal with personal trauma and rebuild their self-esteem.

We're not used to engaging with sheep. We tend to see them from afar in fields, so there's something unique about the situation that helps people talk. Even just hugging them can feel supportive. It's like smuggling fresh wool.

Merlin and my other animals inspired me to write. When we were in lockdown, I started sharing tales of the horses on Facebook and established a large following. Encouraged by my audience, I've written three books. The first two are semi-autobiographical, but the latest, Merlin Finds His Magic, is a children's story – though I've had messages from adults who have been reassured by it. I hope it brings sheep therapy to people who can't come to me in Yorkshire.

I'm proud to be part of James Herriot's legacy. The sheep and I have appeared on Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet a few times, presented by Peter Wright, who was trained by James Herriot, and Julian Norton. Julian has treated the sheep and he even meditated with Merlin. I post videos of Merlin on the Friends of The Yorkshire Vet Facebook page. Sheep are often misunderstood, so it's wonderful to show them as the amazing creatures they are.

TO FIND OUT MORE about Grace's work and her books, head to graceolsonauthor.com.

Creature COMFORTS

Discover the healing power of animals at one of these therapy farms across the UK

Bash-Land, Sheep Therapy and Sanctuary in Worcestershire runs sessions to improve mental health, boost mood and cope with the stresses and strains of modern life. bashland.co.uk

Owens's Farm Therapies in Lewes, East Sussex, harnesses the calming nature of sheep and ponies to help individuals tune into their emotions and overcome challenges such as depression and bereavement. owensfarmtherapies.co.uk

Clinks Care Farm in Norfolk provides placements to disadvantaged people who use the farm and its animals as a therapeutic place to learn and grow. clinkscorefarm.org.uk

Susan's Farm in Carlisle, Cumbria, helps vulnerable adults and young people with learning difficulties, challenging behaviour or mental or physical health problems through hands-on tasks on the farm. susansfarm.co.uk

Middle England Farm, Harley-in-Aiden, Warwickshire, has goats, alpacas and other animals, which support a variety of visitors including those with dementia, learning disabilities and ADHD. middleenglandfarm.co.uk/care-farm

PHOTO BY HELEN SMYTH; PHOTOGRAPHS BY KOBIE BIRCH; ILLUSTRATION BY EMMA SMITH

www.countryliving.com/uk

148 APRIL 2025

Yorkshire Post, Feb 2025

www.yorkshirepost.co.uk @yorkshirepost facebook.com/yorkshirepostnewspaper

Lifestyle | People

THE YORKSHIRE POST
Monday February 17 2025 13

Turn to sheep for therapy, says Grace

Author and therapist Grace Olson is spreading positive messages to young people with her series of children's books, inspired by her therapy sheep. Laura Reid reports.

WHEN Grace Olson was 18, she sent off her first book to the celebrated author Sir Terry Pratchett. It was an illustrated, comical tale about the human body – and she wanted to hear his thoughts.

When the writer wrote back, she was stunned. But she could kick herself for what happened next – and the fact that she can't even apologise to the late, great for her 'rudeness'.

She never replied to his advice on how to get the book published, instead showing his letter – and her manuscript – to the back of a cupboard. "I wish I could go back in time and make myself reply to him," the now 51-year-old reflects.

"I wish I knew why I didn't reply. I think it was because he advised me on how to present the book for an agent and I didn't believe that anyone would think it was good enough. So I put it away to avoid rejection. I'm braver now."

Grace now also has four books to her name. The fifth is due out in a fortnight's time and her sixth is in editing for publication later this year. Those latter two will complete a four-part series which is aimed at children and inspired by Grace's small flock of sheep.

"Each book is about one of my sheep and their characters," she says. "However, each story also has a really vital message to empower children and help them to create their own positive lives. The books are not prescriptive, they're delightful tales, so the message comes through in a really natural way within the story."

Grace's six sheep live close to the edge of the Harwood estate, in Ecosat, Leeds and will likely be familiar to fans of the Channel 5 documentary series, The Yorkshire Vet, after featuring in the show on several occasions.

Along with horses, they form part of Grace's animal assisted therapy work, helping people with mental illnesses or severe depression. Her dream is to run a farm-based therapy centre with free sessions for those seriously unwell.

The books are part of the vision, she explains, to help young people with mental health issues.

plains. "If I can earn an income from my books, I can literally do my therapy work for free. That's why I'm so passionate about them."

Grace, who lives in Moorarwa, describes her collection of sheep adventure stories as an extension of her therapy work.

The first book, Merlin Finds His Magic, explores the idea that true happiness is only experienced when we care for others, she says. She hopes the second – Galahad Finds His Voice – reassures young people that it is okay to be different, and, with her upcoming release, Beverl Finds His Wings, Grace wants to inspire young minds to think positively and "become the heroes of their own destiny".

She says: "Beverl was really scared at first and was bullied for being so shy but he found his inner strength and nobody would dare bully him anymore... He's a brilliant therapy sheep because he is so calm and loving. He will stand with people for hours and he's so cute. It just makes you feel better just to be with him."

Grace's sheep and equine therapy is part of her HeavenStone Healing therapeutic offering, with other services including massage therapy, meditation, and spiritual healing. She has been involved in therapy work for 30 years, but only in the past five or six has been working with animals.

It came after a personal discovery of the "healing power of horses". She says the animals helped to transform her mental health and supported her to find inner peace and joy after she struggled with postnatal depression.

Grace's first two books – The Yard Fire and Howe Healed my Heart and The Farm: My Journey Deepens – capture her own experiences. She turned her hand to writing when she was unable to work during the Covid lockdowns, initially creating a Facebook page to share short stories and extracts with horse lovers.

Her work with therapy sheep then happened by accident. She was offered her first sheep, Merlin, as a pet to help with grazing. Then, during an equine therapy session, Merlin walked over to a client and nuzzled into the lady's knees until she bent down to nuzzle him. "That made her laugh her head off. And that's how sheep therapy was born," says Grace. "He made her laugh and there's no better therapy than laughing."

COUNTING SHEEP: Children's book writer Grace Olson with The Yorkshire Vet, Julian Norton, and some of her therapy sheep.

Now, Merlin is joined by Beverl, twins Galahad and Lancelot, Teddy, and baby Ribbarb. The sheep are "divided out" animals, says Grace, loving and full of personality, but also calm. The human body can mirror that calmness when people are in their presence.

"The animals seem to know who is going to be the therapist, so often it is a sheep," Grace says. "It's miraculous."

She has been working with one lady whose teenage son took his own life. "Merlin came up to her and made her laugh. She's been to the field a few times now and she is a different woman. The animals have helped to heal her, to soothe her soul."

Visibly emotional, Grace continues: "There are so many young people taking their own lives. And if they can learn positivity as a young child, they could avoid that as adults. When I was a child, I was so depressed. I tried to take my life several times. I was bullied at school. Piles of (my) stories are to make children realise they're in charge of their lives... They can be powerful, even as a child. The whole thing is one – my stories, my therapy work."

"I feel like I'm fulfilling my sole purpose," she adds. "I feel like the reason I am alive is to help others."

Beverl Finds His Wings, illustrated by Andrew Prescott, is out March 3. A book launch will be held on March 9 at 1pm at The Little Bookshop in Chapel Allerton. To book a free ticket, visit the.littlebookshops.co.uk.

The Country Smallholder
August 2024

THE COUNTRY
SMALLHOLDER

THERAPY SHEEP

How Merlin the sheep works magic on and off screen

Originally born to be someone's dinner, Merlin the sheep is now the star of a book and a new favourite on Channel 5's popular series, The Yorkshire Vet! How on earth did that happen? We caught up with Merlin's owner to find out more...

Grace's therapy sheep are set to warm hearts on future episodes of The Yorkshire Vet

The last we heard about Merlin was that he was working as a therapy sheep along with Grace Olson's other animals on her smallholding in Eccup, West Yorkshire. But destiny had bigger plans for this little sheep.

"It was pure luck that a friend of mine passed on my sheep agility videos to her friend who is one of the directors on The Yorkshire Vet," said Grace. "She was hooked and called me to ask if I might need a vet and if so, could they come and film?"

As fate would have it, Merlin did have a stubborn issue with his ear following an infection so Julian Norton, The Yorkshire Vet, and the team popped over to help.

"It was such fun! As a farm vet used to dealing with large flocks of difficult-to-handle sheep, Julian was really surprised at how friendly and cuddly Merlin was. He even had a run around the obstacle course with Merlin which was absolutely hilarious!"

Julian and the camera crew were mesmerised by the interactions that they received from Merlin and the feature was a big hit on the current series.

DREAM TO PROVIDE FREE THERAPY FOR PEOPLE

"People love to see 'love' and my sheep and I give that in abundance in our work as therapists. We work primarily with terminally ill people and it's such a humbling experience to be able to bring joy to people who are living with such fear and discomfort."

Grace's big dream is to be able to provide free therapy for people who need help but can't afford it and she is utilising her skills as an author to raise money to fulfil this dream.

"Before the Yorkshire Vet came along, I had already

Merlin's book is out now

Cheeky Merlin knocking the Talk TV cameraman off his feet!

Julian Norton, The Yorkshire Vet is now a firm favourite of Merlin the sheep published a novel which reached number 1 bestseller on Amazon. So it made sense to write a children's book about Merlin knowing that he was set to become a TV sheep."

Merlin Finds His Magic is a beautifully illustrated first chapter book for children aged 5-10 and is all about how Merlin discovered his unique gift of making people happy.

"It's written in the style of a classic fable, very heart-warming and charming and the illustrations are watercolours by a wonderful artist so it's visually a very special book. I wrote it to also appeal to adults so that they can enjoy it when they're reading it to their kids."

Merlin's book has been so popular that it attracted the attention of BBC radio Leeds where Grace enjoyed a fun interview on the Gayle Lothouse show and that led to a fabulous feature on Talk TV.

"Merlin was so cheeky! He wasn't getting enough attention during the filming so he decided to knock the cameraman off his feet! Fortunately, he had a good sense of humour..."

SO WHAT'S NEXT ON THE HORIZON FOR MERLIN AND THE REST OF THE WOOLLY THERAPY GANG?

"Well, I'm not allowed to give away any details but there are a few more features in the can with The Yorkshire Vet and they're all really fun and heart-warming. We also have some features coming up with the BBC."

Will there be any more sheep books to add to the collection?

"Yes! I am currently writing a story featuring my Clun Forest sheep and then after that there will be one about my very cute Blue Texel. I want children to see how special sheep are and what better way than in the form of a lovely story?"

If you would like to learn more about Grace and her books and therapy work, have a look at her website www.graceolsonauthor.com.

(Ruminations of a Yorkshire Vet by Julian Norton is out now and will be followed by New Pastures for a Yorkshire Vet in autumn 2024 - extract in September's The Country Smallholder)

Merlin loves being the star of a children's book!

Snapshot Magazine
July 2024

Amazing Grace Olson

A special feature on author Grace Olson

Grace Olson is an author, therapist and animal lover based in Leeds, West Yorkshire. She is the writer of three best-selling books and has featured on Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet with her wonderful therapy sheep. She has been a therapist for 30 years, helping people with a wide range of problems. Her goal is to set up a 'therapy farm' with the proceeds from her books, so that she can afford to do her special therapy work with her animals at no cost for people with terminal illness. Her books are both amusing and enlightening as she shares her own personal life stories with a refreshing candour.

The Yard by Grace Olson

This is a refreshingly honest memoir about post-natal depression, vulnerability and low self esteem - and how the author found a way through her problems as she spent time at a local stables allowing the miracle of a rescued horse to open her heart and soul like a flower opening in the sunshine. The book is a beautifully written memoir full of amusing stories, anecdotes, and characters (with both two and four legs!). Grace hopes to set up a farm-based therapy centre for terminally ill people to share the wonders of the therapeutic benefits of animals with a wider audience, with the proceeds of the sale of this book going towards making that dream a reality. Recommended.

The Farm by Grace Olson

Grace continues her story, weaving her horse-related escapades into a deeply personal and honest account of her own emotional and mental struggles. Reaching back into her own childhood, and cleverly reflecting her experiences with those of her own daughter, Grace manages to cover many important topics with a light yet impressive touch, much like the touch that her wayward horse responds best to. Grace's story has the power to reach into the heart of anyone who has been the victim of bullying, offering solace and the potential for self-discovery and empowerment. Grace's ongoing hilarious horsey exploits and experiences also add an extra layer of excellent entertainment.

Merlin Finds his Magic by Grace Olson

Separated from the flock, Merlin the lamb desperately yearns to return home. His mummy had told him he was magic. Could his magic help him to get back to her? Merlin has no idea what his magic does but life presents him with several new companions in the form of three bouncy goats, three wise horses and a little girl who is able to understand what animals say. Each one teaches him that nature surrounds us with magic all the time. A whimsical tale for young and old. This is a beautifully illustrated book that will delight readers of all ages - not just children - with a timeless message to inspire and encourage us all.

Absolutely Yorkshire Magazine, July 2024

"Sheep can help lead to a deep feeling of inner peace"

CULTURE · INTERVIEW

Animal SOS

Grace Olson has won us over with her hilarious and heartfelt books, not to mention making the lives of many a happier place. Absolutely heads to Leeds to find out more

By MARK KEBBLE

Considering the topics of post-natal depression, bullying and death come up in a conversation with Grace Olson, you'd expect it to be a real downer - but time with the Leeds local Absolutely urges you to seek out her work - it will, we guarantee, put a smile on your face. We first came across Grace when we heard about her book, The Bird, How A Horse Healed My Heart. "I was very inspired by James Herriot and his vivid descriptions of the rolling Yorkshire countryside and the hilarious farming characters," she explains its origins. "It was lockdown and I was unable to do my therapy work, but I wanted to do something that would uplift people. So I wrote one little memoir about a very funny old horse I'd been caring for and posted it in a horsey Facebook group. The response was amazing! Several hundred people loved it and that inspired me to set up my own Facebook page where I write a weekly story to entertain people. The page rapidly gathered thousands of followers and they all wanted a book, so as I had acres of spare time, I wrote The Bird! How did he feel writing the book? "I loved writing the comical moments - it made me laugh out loud!" she says with, of course, a laugh. "And I loved reminiscing about the beautiful places in Yorkshire where I had been fortunate to ride out in. But writing my memoirs about the post-natal depression was painful and it did make me cry a bit, however the parts about the healing epiphanies with the horses were very therapeutic for me." The path to the healing magic of animals wasn't a straight forward one. "I was very ashamed that I felt so depressed to be a mother," she says. "So many people are desperate to become parents and have difficulty conceiving, so I felt ungrateful and that made me hide my true feelings and pretend that I was really enjoying being a new mum. "To begin with I only had a cat and she was very helpful to spend time with," Grace continues. "We then got a dog and that was hard work but lovely. It was when I returned to horse riding that I began to feel confident and empowered to be more of the person I had been before the depression knocked me down. There is something magical about horses that dissolves your sadness and brings you back into the light." Grace was sceptical but took it as a cue that revolved around therapy. "When I qualified as a massage, I was full of self-doubt so to avoid actually launching my business, I went on another massage course!" she laughs. "The teacher taught me a specific treatment - manual lymphatic drainage - for fluid removal and she said 'Now go out there and get working!' so I found the courage to begin. "This treatment enabled me to offer help to post-operative cancer patients who needed fluid draining therapy and my name grew as a therapist, which brought me more and more people. Over 20 years later I learned equine facilitated coaching and, during a session, one of my pet sheep chose to involve himself and so the magic of sheep therapy began by accident! It is sheep therapy that caught the eye of Channel 5's The Yorkshire Vet, and the show has regularly featured her since. "Sheep are usually a very oblique type of animal that people only see at a distance and they are unable to touch them. To be able to get close enough to cuddle a sheep is a very unusual experience that truly delights people," Grace explains their power. "Sheep are the most adaptable mammal, able to cope with many changes of environment. This means that they are calm more often than they are stressed. They are mainly active in their parasympathetic nervous system (PNS) - eating and digesting; conserving their energy. Being near a sheep enables people to access their own PNS leading to a deep feeling of inner peace and a reduction in stress hormones. "There's no getting away from the fact that her work will see her encounter death. "I cry - a lot," she admits. "I create real relationships. It is the greatest honour to serve someone who is on their outward journey"

CULTURE · INTERVIEW

Her books, too, continue to spread happiness and inspire many. Merlin finds his Magic was a book for a younger audience with a sheep as the star of the show, and a follow up to The Bird is due out now. "The Farm has many lovers," Grace explains. "Firstly, it's a beautiful story full of Yorkshire countryside and eccentric characters with a lot of comical action and dialogue. But it is also a deep dive into my past history of having been a victim of bullying. Once again, the horses come to my rescue and the reader experiences my growth and transformation." Home life in Leeds has been the perfect backdrop for Grace to write The Farm. "I love nature the most so I am extremely fortunate that every day I get to enjoy walks in the glorious woods with my greyhound and then spend time at our smallholding, near Harwood, which has many wildlife visitors. We have stags, foxes, Red Kites, cute little rabbits, wild geese and so many fabulous song birds," she smiles. "I love Chapel Allerton, which is a short walk from where I live, because it has so many fabulous independent shops such as The Glasshouse Gallery, which has unique crystal jewellery, and a wonderful independent shop called The Little Bookshop who have supported my books. It also has lots of cafes and restaurants. I love our East Coast too. My favourite place to visit is Robin Hood's Bay for its ever-changing rocky beach full of wonderful rockpools. I also love Gouthwaite because it's filled with hundreds of free-roaming sheep. It's always heaven!" Absolutely isn't surprised, but this interview ends with Grace thinking about others. "The vision is at least 15 acres of land in Yorkshire and a lovely farmhouse that can be used as an indoor therapy centre with other practitioners - massage, healing, homopathy, osteopathy, acupuncture, yoga, meditation, art therapy, dance therapy, music therapy, writing therapy," she says on her dream to have a therapy farm. "The outdoor therapy will involve my sheep and horses and hopefully some cows in the future. Meditation and yoga in nature - experiencing peace, calm and happiness. "I want to offer a complete package of real care for people facing terminal illness and their loved ones. I want it to be a charity so that people who can't afford it can still come and be immersed in a loving and supportive environment. A place where their loved ones will always be welcome to visit after they have gone."

Yorkshire Post, June 2024

The Big Interview

Embracing tonic

Yorkshire Vet regular Grace Olson talks to Louisa Gregson about her life and how she comforts people with terminal illnesses through her farm animals and books.

WHEN an imposing horse placed its nose directly over Yorkshire Vet regular Grace Olson's heart, she sobbed uncontrollably from the "depths of her soul". Years of crippling depression, guilt and trauma melted away in the middle of a field and placing her hands on the horse's shoulders, Grace knew her life, blighted by mental health issues from the age of five, would never be the same again. From being a troubled infant, Grace, from Leeds, says she struggled with simply being alive, despite having a loving upbringing, and years of being bullied at school drove her to an attempted teenage suicide. Suffering PTSD after giving birth to her daughter, Tali, brought further pain, but she finally found healing in her love of horses and now helps terminally ill people to find inner peace with the help of therapy sheep on her Yorkshire farm.

Grace, who is now 50, says she was bullied at school from the age of seven to 14, when her ordeal resulted in drastic consequences. "I was a very sensitive person, I was one of the most popular people in the school and had loads of friends – but a girl at school just didn't like me, and I was so soft-natured that I wanted to appease her. My mother was amazing and very loving but over-protective. I wasn't taught how to stand up for myself and I was filled with fear every morning before school."

Describing her suicide attempt, Grace says: "It was like I snapped, I just walked home and very calmly I swallowed a whole bottle of painkillers and went upstairs to my room to lie down to die. Then suddenly this voice within me said: 'You have got to sort this out.' I told the lady across the road and she called an ambulance. I had to have my stomach pumped and see a psychiatrist. My poor mother was not aware of me being bullied or how bad I was feeling – it was just hideous."

Despite moving schools, Grace says she simply attracted more bullies. She also suffered when she became a mother herself in her early thirties. Following a traumatic caesarean, Grace says she found herself unable to love her baby.

"I was expecting it to be this amazing experience to become a mother. I was really looking forward to it but when it happened it was awful. I was in shock. I had a lot of blood loss. I was low in iron and B vitamins and then there I was having to look after this baby. It was an absolute horror show."

"I managed to do all the practical things because I wanted her to have good memories. But I just didn't feel any emotion whatsoever – just fear and depression. It took me seven years to really love my daughter."

Grace is aware of a stigma attached to mothers who say they struggle with motherhood – a taboo she addresses in her books The Farm, published earlier this month, and The Yard and hopes will encourage more women to open up. "That's my whole purpose of writing – the books are full of comedy. They're very similar to the James Herriot books, so they're easy to read. But they go very deep and I want ordinary women to be able to read these books and know that, actually, it's normal to feel totally sc."

For Grace, animals were a huge part of her healing. It was another encounter with bullying and a feral pony that finally taught her self-worth. "Me and my friend took on a livery yard and I was bullied by a woman in my own livery. It was terrifying, like being back at school. Then my friend got a young pony that was so badly behaved and we had no boundaries – we couldn't stop her from barging into us and doing what she wanted. We took her to a riding school and we learned techniques of how to value yourself and how to not be bullied."

She adds: "Horses need to know where your stop line is. It's all about feeling confident within yourself and thinking 'no you won't step over the line and walk all the way through me'. From learning how to keep myself safe from this feral pony, I learned I actually had value and I felt powerful enough to speak to the woman and it changed everything."

EWELYN: Main picture, Grace with two of the therapy sheep on her farm and, above, alongside fellow Yorkshire Vet Julian Norton.

But it was an encounter with a huge brown horse that finally helped Grace find peace and led her towards her work with animals and dying people. After travelling to a beautiful mountain farm in Wales to learn about a bridle for a problematic horse, she was invited to pick out a horse she didn't like the look of. "I pointed to this big brown sports horse. All the horses were trotting past and he came past me – but he stopped and put his nose on my heart, and I just started crying."

"The lady said: 'Just put your hands on his shoulder', so I stood next to him and did so and all these tears just came. I was properly sobbing from the depth of my soul. It was absolutely bizarre. She said: 'He's telling you that you don't need to be afraid of him' and I continued crying even more. She asked: 'What are you crying about?' and my mind went right into my feelings of guilt and remorse about being a bad mother. She then asked: 'So who took care of your baby?' Was it you or somebody else?' and I said it was me. She asked me what I did with her and so I told her all about all the groups that I took her to and the routine I put her in."

"In that conversation, I realised I had done so much for her. But actually that is love. It was just a light-bulb moment. I was able to realise that love isn't a feeling, it's doing."

From then on, Grace, already a qualified massage therapist, realised the power of healing with animals, signing up to a degree-level coaching course, learning to observe horse body language within a therapy session.

She says her work with therapy sheep happened by accident when she was offered a couple of pet sheep and knew they were good for grazing. "I got these sheep for practical reasons but they're like dogs, they're so loving. It was phenomenal. During a therapy session, my sheep Merlin was watching me and walked up to this woman and just barged into her and made her cuddle him."

Today Grace works with terminally ill patients, helping them face death with the help of five sheep including Merlin. "People who have been diagnosed with a terminal illness are filled with fear because when you're faced with your own mortality, it's terrifying," she says. "The purpose of the session is for them to find inner peace and calmness. The sheep help because they are just super-chilled animals. We all have mirror neurons, so we mirror who we're with."

"If you're with a calm sheep, that makes you feel calm. It's unusual to cuddle a sheep, so along with the smell of them and the feel of the wool, it helps people to step into another dimension and relax."

Grace first started working with terminally ill people when she first qualified, nearly 30 years ago, and learned a particular massage which helps cancer patients. "I realised this is my sole purpose – to help people die better. In the process of helping others, you can learn a lot about yourself. I've learned so much from terminally ill people and they have changed me completely. Each one has been like a magical gift. I've loved every one of them deeply."

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Your Horse, May 2024

We love...

EQUESTRIAN AUTHOR PENS SECOND BOOK

Grace Olson, an equestrian author, has written a new book, a follow up to her Amazon bestseller, The Yard – How a Horse Healed my Heart, and this time she has tackled the subject of bullying.

“I suffered hideous bullying at a livery yard, but a feral pony helped me to learn how to protect myself,” said Grace, who’s new book, The Farm – My Journey Deepens, also chronicles issues such as unresolved childhood trauma. It is due to be published on 3 June.

Find out more at graceolsonauthor.com

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Yorkshire Evening Post
April 2024

BREAKING lad at 60 Star quits BBC in tears Megastar's devastating health update King Charlie

People

Eccup: I met the Leeds therapy sheep that has healing powers - and everyone should try it

By  Geha Pandey
Community Reporter

 Comment

Published 7th Apr 2024, 16:30 GMT

Meet Merlin the Therapy Sheep and the rest of the flock with Leeds owner, therap...
National World - LocalTV

On a little farm in Eccup, past a golf course and near the reservoir, live five sheep.

They belong to qualified equine therapist Grace Olson, of Moortown, who believes it is her 'sole purpose' to treat people. She achieves this with the help of the animals on the farm.

Grace Olson, therapist and author, with her new book Merlin Finds His Magic based on her therapy sheep Merlin. Photo: Submitted | Submitted

The concept of spending time among nature and animals as a means of healing is a long-standing one, backed by many scientific studies.

Grace said the friendly animals on her patch can help people "loosen up" and express their concerns with ease.

But there's a deeper element to it. Grace predominantly works with terminally ill cancer patients, who need a level of emotional support that can be difficult to come by.

Time spent among these "magical" animals can help people face death with less fear, Grace finds.

I spent an hour on the farm earlier this week, and despite not seeking any emotional support or having anything worrisome on my mind, the time that I spent with the five sheep in a open green field led me to easily understand how beneficial this kind of therapy can be for some.

Grace is incredibly easy to speak to thanks to her warm nature but the stars of the show, the sheep, are very well-behaved and eager to meet new people.

Merlin, a sheep that Grace got two years ago, is the most social. Wanting to be pet, scratched and smothered, he spent much of his time brushing up against my leg.

This was new to me - I haven't been on a farm since I was maybe 10 - but I found myself reaching out to the sheep anyway.

Leaving the farm and leaving a therapist in the traditional sense felt largely similar: I felt lighter - maybe it was the fresh air, maybe it was the safe environment that Grace fosters, or maybe it was just Merlin.

Grace has been championing the benefits of spending time with such animals for years. In January, she released a children's book called Merlin Finds His Magic, to share just what sheep can do for us.

Many people have got in touch with Grace to say it has also helped them massively, and while it wasn't intentional, Grace says she is fortunate to know she can also offer therapy through written word.

Find out more about Grace Olson and the therapy sheep via her social media channels.

Related topics: Sheep Leeds Animals Nature

Comment

GOING NUTS: The nuthatch gets its name for its fondness for nuts, which it holds in its claws and chips open with careful chiselling. The word 'hatch' comes from the old French word 'hache' meaning axe or hatchet. Birds rarely travelling far from the woods where they hatch.

Healing powers of Merlin the sheep

I WAS out and about on a sheep farm recently. But this was not a normal sheep farm. And Grace was not a typical farmer. The handful of sheep she cared for would never see an auction mart, nor an abattoir and would have no role in the food chain. Along with a couple of horses, these sheep helped provide therapy for people in need. Was this a worthwhile role for our ovine friends? Over the course of this afternoon visit, I felt sure I'd find the answer.

I first met Grace on the farm to see a magical sheep called Merlin. He had a sore and damaged ear, which was the reason why Grace had come to own him. The farmer who once looked after him did not think it was fixable, so was happy to divest himself of a problem. The ear healed up nicely following treatment with our new light therapy a few months ago. Today, a new male sheep needed castrating so he could co-habit with the rest of the flock without risk of any coitus and concomitant pregnancies. It was a simple process, and afterwards, I spent a bit of time talking about the wider role of the flock. Grace told me about the visitors she had, some suffering from terminal illness, others from mental health problems. All of them felt better after half an hour or so around her calm and apparently empathetic creatures.

"I have lots of people who come and just sit with the sheep. Merlin, especially, is lovely. He actually loves contact with people and affection," explained Grace, emphasising the words 'lovely' and 'love'. The fluffy sheep had acquired a reputation among her clients, of Arthurian proportions. "They love him. And he loves them," she continued. Kneeling among the sheep, in the warmth of the sun on this wintry day, was indeed an experience which was almost ethereal. Merlin sauntered up to me, then nestled closely, searching for a hug.

Julian Norton The Yorkshire Vet

It reminded me of a lovely scene in an episode of the final series of a classic Netflix series. Adam is a confused adolescent, struggling with various issues centred around low self-esteem and a difficult relationship with his father. He finally finds his niche in life, helping in the stables at a riding school, looking after the horses. Although he knows nothing about animals, he quickly finds himself at home among the animals and slowly his life starts to change. One day, his father arrives, also seeking solace for the problems in his life. "Adam, we need to talk," he says. There is a brief and emotional interchange between father and son, before Adam offers his solution.

"Do you want to hug a horse?" says Adam, enlightened by the healing powers of being around animals.

Until I met Grace and Merlin, it had never occurred to me that sheep might have a similar therapeutic effect. Normal sheep, like tiny dots of cotton wool on distant hills, run away from humans and, in fact, most other things. They do not seem to enjoy human contact and prefer the company of their woolly friends.

But maybe it is because they haven't had the right opportunity. Maybe, given half a chance (as I'd discovered today) they, too, thrive on company. It was very enlightening. It reminded me of the huge impact animals can have on humans, often in an unexpected context. Yes, we all know about the special bond associated with "man's best friend" and every cat owner is well acquainted with that interaction. The perennial "are you a cat or a dog person" question will go on for ever, but it doesn't really matter.

A better question would be: "are you an animal person?" I hope so, because all our lives are better with an animal around.

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

February 2024

Grace's magical sheep

★ LEEDS author GRACE OLSON, pictured above, has turned her talents to writing a book for children about the healing power of sheep.

Merlin Finds His Magic is about Merlin the lamb who goes on an adventure with three bouncy goats, three wise horses and a little girl, and learns that real magic is more wonderful than he could ever have imagined.

The real Merlin has been filmed several times for the Channel Five show The Yorkshire Vet with JULIAN NORTON, who has written about the healing powers Grace's sheep seem to have on terminally ill and mental health patients.

He said: "All of them felt better after half an hour or so around Grace's calm and apparently empathetic creatures."

Grace - whose first novel, The Yard, was about horses - said: "I have lots of people who come and just sit with the sheep. Merlin, especially, is lovely. He loves contact with people and affection."

She added: "The book is beautifully illustrated and it appeals to adults too as I have been receiving some wonderful messages from people who have enjoyed reading it."

Horse & Hound, December 2023

HORSE&HOUND

Join | Login

Home / News

‘We need these zones’: rider hopes safety idea can bring harmony between road users

 Becky Murray
2 December, 2023 19:33

HORSE&HOUND

Join | Login

Horse & Hound, November 2023

NEWS Insider

Equine therapy field growing as more people see horses' benefits

By BECKY MURRAY

THE equine-assisted therapy field is continuing to grow as more people see the benefits horses can offer.

Dementia, mental health and terminal illness are some areas in which equine-assisted therapy is proving beneficial, and providers are reporting an increase in patients referred by social prescribing (when health professionals refer patients to community support).

The Way of the Horse, founded by Dina Shale, treats children and adults for conditions such as stress, anxiety and trauma - including those who come to her via social prescribing. The business also offers training courses on delivering equine therapy.

"We're seeing the industry grow, especially with people who are not horsey. Most of the people that come to us have never been around horses but they are looking for an answer and we have the solution," Ms Shale told H&H.

"Our programmes are 'trauma-informed', so it's teaching people to develop and understand their bodies. We use horses to demonstrate the fight and flight mechanism and we help people to understand what stress is and how it manifests in the body.

"Our bodies do the same sort of thing as horses' do when they are scared of things; when we feel fear, we respond either by going into fight or flight. When you understand the basics of the science behind what is happening in your body when you feel anxious or stressed, you have a chance to calm that nervous system and the tools to regulate it."

Grace Olson of Heaven Stone Healing provides equine-assisted therapy to people with terminal illnesses, and has had clients referred via social prescribing. She told H&H the equine-assisted therapy industry is "talked about more".

"My therapy focuses on helping these people just to find inner peace so that they can cope with things like their hospital appointments. Sometimes in sessions all a person wants to do is just stand with a horse, and that's enough for them," she said.

"It's a chance to show that horses are for everyone"

GRACE OLSON

"Horses have a lot more to offer than we were ever aware of. I personally feel the vibration of a horse is just naturally healing."

Ms Olson was involved in organising a class at Weeton Show on 30 July to celebrate therapy equines. People who could not attend could enter online, and a marquee displayed pictures of the horses and information about them.

The equine-assisted therapy industry continues to grow

"We wanted to celebrate equines as therapists," she said. "If someone had had physical, mental or emotional therapy from any equine, whether they owned the animal or it was at a centre, they could enter.

"The public could meet the horses and handlers and find out how to access this type of help. It's a chance to show that anyone can access horses, even if visiting a rescue centre. Horses are for everyone."

A Riding for the Disabled Association (RDA) spokesman told H&H the charity now has 50 groups offering "tea with a pony" sessions for those living with dementia.

"This started in 2018 at Cotswold RDA, which had become aware of the increasing number of people living in their community with a range of life-changing conditions, particularly dementia, and for whom riding was not suitable but who might be helped by some other form of animal-assisted therapy involving horses," said the spokesman.

"Other RDA groups run specialist hippotherapy sessions, and increasingly we are seeing a rise in social

Horses are helping people with mental health issues, dementia and terminal illness, and more are being referred for therapy by health professionals bit quirky, but they're having positive health and wellbeing outcomes for the people benefiting from them," she said.

"There's a whole spectrum of therapeutic equine services; from Godolphin taking former racehorses into care homes, to horses being used to support military veterans, or people with physical mobility problems. It's huge and it's growing.

"We held an event in March to celebrate our anniversary and we had more than 150 people attend from across the industry, including the Princess Royal, and it shows the attention the sector is getting."

MEETING STANDARDS

MS COLLINS added that the organisation has been "delighted" with the applications it has received to the register.

"We're working on the basis that if people don't meet the standards we will advise them how to do so, rather than just say you're not in," she said.

"The most common things that people need support with are making sure they have a safeguarding policy - or that they're insured. We'll look at their insurance policies and say, 'You're not really covered here for what you're doing,' and it's quite a shock for them.

"I think it's been really good because collectively everybody's learned that in some areas there may be a few weaknesses, and that's why the register is needed. It's all helping raise the standard."

Pictures by Getty Images, Stephen Sparkes, Alamy, Peter Noon and Eili Birch/Boots And Hooves

Yorkshire Post
Sept 2023

Horses playing key role in wellbeing

HEALING: Main picture, Grace Olsen with therapy horse Belle, and, above, with Pippa. Below, Galahad the sheep also helps people with depression.

There is a growing interest in using horses as therapy. Emma Ryan spoke to one woman promoting the concept... as well as using sheep.

HORSES have been hailed as a major therapy solution for helping people in a range of conditions from cancer to depression. Author and horse lover, Grace Olsen, who lives in Moortown in Leeds, is hoping to show the public that horses are not just for sport, but for something much deeper.

Earlier this year she was asked by Weeton Show about the possibility of introducing the concept of therapy horses at its annual event.

The show, held at the end of July, had introduced a new class called Community Pony where people were asked to nominate an equine that had helped them feel empowered, develop confidence and have the ability to deal with everyday life better.

There was also a parade of horses to show the connection between them and humans.

Such was the response and interest in therapy horses, Grace is now looking at getting them to other Yorkshire shows during next year's season and ultimately at The Great Yorkshire Show and the Horse of the Year Show.

She said: "We had a parade of eight horses. It was wonderful how many people were interested. Lots of the au-

'I am treating a lot more people with general depression and young people with suicidal depression but it is really helping them.'

dience came to speak to us in the ring afterwards. There is a very big interest in how horses are therapeutic."

As well as writing she has two of her own horses, Pippa whom she has had for ten years and Belle. They are both horses she uses for 'happy hacking' herself and therapy.

Mainly, Grace works with clients who are terminally ill and the horses help them feel calm.

"It is not a subject people ever want to talk about but it is the most guaranteed part of life", she said.

"I had a lady come to me in the last couple of weeks of her life and she would still make herself get up and come to our fields. The whole thing, being in the field, the peace, the wild birds, it was everything that helps to soothe people as well as being near horses."

It isn't a new 'fad' although it has admittedly gained more interest in the last few years. But there is some science to the theory.

Grace explains: "Science has recently discovered, because of the size of the heart and nervous system, the electric magnetic radiation makes physical changes within people when they sit next to them (horses), it is not just fantasy. Because horse hearts are so big, there is a big vibe going on there. People don't even have to touch the horses."

"Your central nervous system starts to work differently, that is when you feel calm. Horses don't think as much as we do. Their whole system is working differently. It is wonderful."

One of her clients had a tumour in her liver. Pippa had been disinterested in people at that time but made a beeline for the woman and placed her head over the area of the body where the cancer was.

When the horses have done a session, there is also a change in them said Grace.

"They are totally different. You can tell that they feel that their life has more value. Horses are wonderful at sport and that is fantastic but being a healer is a bit more valuable than jumping over a pole."

Grace is qualified and insured to treat people with horses and can only use the horses listed with the insurance company but she is also now looking at sheep as therapy animals.

It came about during a normal session when one of her sheep was determined to get involved and left the client laughing.

She has six sheep at the moment which are a mixture of Clun Forest, Blue Texel and Texel cross and hopes to get more next year as they are good for people with depression – a condition that animals are more often being linked to as tools for treatment.

Grace said: "I am treating a lot more people with general depression and young people with suicidal depression but it is really helping them. Sheep are great for depressed people, I think it makes them laugh."

"You expect to be able to touch a horse but sheep are usually in a field and a distant animal but mine are like dogs. One woman has not smiled for a year and left with a big grin on her face."

Last year she had a book published, entitled The Yard: How a Horse Healed My Heart, which she began writing during the pandemic, initially creating a Facebook page to share short stories and extracts with horse-lovers and was about how Pippa helped her deal with her own post-natal depression.

She is currently writing The Farm: Our Journey Continues and as well as working to get more presence at country shows she would like to be earning enough money from book sales so she can treat people for free.

Your Horse, August 2023

THE COUNTRY SMALLHOLDER

SHEEP AS THERAPY

Find out more at thecountrysmallholder.com

Grace and friends enjoying a quiet moment in the country

Meet the therapists!

We look at how Grace Olson discovered the healing power of sheep

Merlin, Galahad and Lancetot may look like just a trio of scruffy sheep but their role in life is very important. They work as therapy sheep with their handler Grace Olson, helping humans to feel better. But how did it all begin? Let's rewind 16 years...

Following an emergency caesarean, during which the anaesthetic wore off half-way through, Grace was plunged into post-natal depression and grief. After a few years of soldiering on, as mums do, she finally realised that she needed something in her life that would make her feel happy again.

"As a child, my favourite toys had been my farm set and riding school. So it dawned on me that I needed to be outside with animals. I had ridden as a child so I had a few refresher lessons and then I got a horse on loan. The horse lived on a smallholding with various animals so it was just perfect."

After a year of riding, Grace booked herself a weekend in Wales at a mountain farm that specialised in animal therapy. "It was life-changing. That was the piece of the jigsaw that I needed to get myself well again and it was the most beautiful farm. There were alpacas, goats and horses. It was such a mind-blowing experience that I came away a different person. All the years of guilt and sadness melted away and from then on I became a much better mother and I valued myself more."

So how did Grace go from that experience to becoming a therapist working with sheep?

"Well, I was already a qualified massage therapist and 'natural listener' so it was another few years of learning more about horses and their body language that changed my work. I enrolled on an ILM coaching course and became a certified equine facilitated coach and began renting a 7-acre smallholding but something always felt lacking. In my heart I wanted to work with cows and sheep. We didn't have enough space for cows but we did have space for sheep."

And this is where it gets a little bit spooky! Grace didn't know where to start in her search for sheep but out of the blue, a friend asked her if she might be interested in taking on a pet lamb that needed a home.

"It was so bizarre, I had only just decided I wanted sheep when I got this message asking to re-home a lamb. The lamb was very cuddly and he ended up arriving at our smallholding along with another lamb from the same farm who had not been bottle fed so he was a bit wild."

Sadly, the pet lamb died so Grace was left with the wild lamb who she named Merlin. In no time, Merlin transformed into what Grace calls "a cuddle monster".

"He was just like a pet dog, following me around and asking for cuddles. Although he had our horses for company, I felt he needed more sheep."

ENTER THE CLUN FOREST SHEEP!

Pete led Grace to meeting a breeder of Clun Forest sheep who gave her a pair of wethers the same age as Merlin who of course became Galahad and Lancetot.

"They were so nerdy! You couldn't go near them without sending them into apoplexy so I put a lot of time into sitting quietly near them and after a few months they realised I am safe and all three of them love being near me while I'm doing my jobs in the field."

It was then that the sheep therapy began to happen very naturally, starting with one of the loads from the village where Grace rents her smallholding.

Grace with the book she has written

"I needed help moving a heavy trough so I asked one of the neighbours. This particular lady was very depressed following the sudden death of her husband. Merlin and the Cluns trotted straight up to her and let her stroke them which she found absolutely enchanting. It's not every day you get to touch a soft, woolly lamb is it? The smile on her face was literally ear to ear. She laughed for the first time since losing her husband and went home happy. It was then I realised that's real therapy."

Since that day, Merlin and friends have brought solace to other people suffering depression due to various issues. But what is involved with a sheep therapy session?

"Well, there's no set routine. Everybody who comes, presents with different needs. A lot of the people I treat have terminal cancer so for them it's all about simply getting back to nature. Cuddling the sheep makes them feel instantly happier. This then leads to a loosening up within them which enables them to start talking about their fears, family problems and other worries. Using my coaching skills, I listen and ask further questions which helps them to work out what, if anything, they want to do to improve their life."

MEDITATION WITHIN NATURE FOR PEACE AND CLARITY

Some people just enjoy being in silence with Grace's sheep and horses and this type of meditation within nature is enough to bring peace and clarity – something we all need in this hectic world.

"I am very lucky to be able to have the help of my friend's Shire horse as part of my therapy team. He is enormous yet so intuitive and graceful. His presence makes people feel supported by a giant at a time when life is making them feel fearful and small. It's a wonderful thing to see the traditional hard-working farm animal, being the key to teaching people how to find inner stillness."

Sheep enjoy contact too!

Meet the therapy team

During lockdown when Grace was unable to work, she decided to write about her journey from misery to happiness thanks to the healing power of animals.

"I set up a Facebook page and posted a weekly episode every Friday. It was amazing how popular it was! So many people messaged me to say how much it lifted their spirits and they looked forward to Friday. It was compared to All Creatures Great and Small so many times and then people began asking for a book."

Grace spent two years writing her book and editing it, honing it into the very best it could be. Sadly, it was rejected by every agent she approached but Grace did not give up. She self-published and the book became an overnight success, selling out the first day it was released on June 27th 2022 and reaching the coveted number 1 spot in various categories on Amazon.

"I get so many messages from readers, both men and women, thanking me for being so honest and allowing them to speak out about their mental health issues. It also makes them laugh which is the best medicine!"

Grace's book is entitled 'The Yard-How a Horse Healed My Heart'. Many readers have said it is genuinely hilarious and feel-good, full of eccentric humans, horses, goats, cows and chickens in tabards. Although it dives deep into depression it leaves the reader feeling joyful and inspired to improve their own life. Grace wants to use the money from book sales to use as an income so that she can treat people who can't afford her sheep therapy for free. The book is available to buy online in paperback from Waterstones, WH Smith, Blackwell's, Amazon, The British Horse Society and The Book Depository. It's also available as an E book and Audiobook.

The boys are still very close

Take a Break, February 2023

Our Lives

Me with baby Tali

As I sat on the sofa with my husband Doug and we stared at the positive pregnancy test in my hand, we couldn't have felt happier.

'I can't wait to be a mum,' I said.

My pregnancy progressed, and as my bump grew, so did my excitement.

But in time, my due date came and went.

A couple of weeks passed before I went into labour.

At hospital, I was given an epidural to help with the pain, but 24 hours went by and my baby was still in no hurry to be born.

'We'll need to perform an emergency Caesarean,' a doctor said.

But I realised something — I could still feel my legs as I moved them from side to side.

I thought: Hold on, if I've had an epidural, surely I shouldn't be able to move my legs?

I gripped Doug's hand. 'Something's not right,' I said. 'I don't think the epidural's worked properly.'

But before I knew it, I was being rushed to the operating theatre and medics sprung into action.

My daughter Tali was born, weighing a healthy 7lb 11oz. But as I was being sewed up, I began to feel every stitch.

'It's hurting!' I cried. 'I can feel everything!' But it was like being underwater, and nobody seemed to hear me.

The pain grew worse. Doug saw the panic in my face, but all he could do was look on helplessly.

Finally, I was taken back to the ward, and a nurse gave me a shot of morphine.

I didn't meet Tali properly until the following morning. But as I stared at her little features, I felt numb.

Days later, we were discharged from hospital and returned home.

But the trauma of the birth haunted me. I suffered severe postnatal depression and was unable to bond with Tali.

I made sure she was fed, clean, safe and happy. But as Tali grew, things didn't get much better.

I took her to dance classes in the morning and to the park in the afternoons.

But I was an emotional wreck. One night, as I lay in bed with Doug, I made a confession. 'I can't cope,' I said.

His eyes filled with tears. I

'I don't think the epidural's worked'

NEIGH worries, Grace!

After a traumatic birth, I struggled to bond with my child. But help came trotting into my life when I least expected it. By Grace Olson, 49

Us with Velvet

Me with one of my therapy horses, Belle knew that he wanted to help me, but I was in the throes of postnatal depression.

I felt trapped in a fog and couldn't see my way out.

Despite my own struggles, Tali grew into a bright little girl. And like me, she adored horses.

So, when she was six, we decided to look after a horse on loan.

The horse was named Velvet, and we would visit her at the livery yard a short drive from our home in Leeds, West Yorkshire.

Tali and I loved to brush Velvet's long brown mane. She fed Velvet apples and laughed when she gave an appreciative neigh.

Every morning, Tali asked: 'Are we going to see Velvet again today, Mummy?'

I realised that whenever we visited Velvet together, I'd have a smile on my face for the rest of the day.

I told Doug: 'I feel like there's finally something Tali and I can bond over.'

I wanted to buy a new bridle for Velvet. But felt it was cruel to force an animal to have something stuck in its mouth, so I wanted a bitless bridle.

After doing some research, I found two women, named Rosemary and Sheila, who ran a farm in Ceredigion.

They had the perfect bridle, and offered to show me how to use it. I travelled to meet them, and when I arrived, they greeted me with a warm smile.

I took in the incredible views around their land. On the farm, there were 20 horses, plus alpacas and goats — all roaming freely in large fields.

Then Rosemary said: 'Go and choose three horses you like, and one you don't.'

I felt confused, but I went along with it.

I selected three horses I felt a good vibe from, and one I felt 'off' about.

I learnt his name was Andy.

Then, all of a sudden, he trotted towards me, stuck out his nose and pressed it against my heart.

There was something tender about the moment and, unexpectedly, I burst into tears.

I felt shocked by my reaction. But when I looked at Rosemary, she said: 'Andy's telling you that you don't have to be afraid. Put your hand on him, and tell me how you're feeling.'

Slowly, I placed my hand on his shiny coat. And as I did, all the fears, thoughts and anxieties I'd been holding on to for years came spilling out.

I explained about my depression. But instead of judgment, Rosemary's eyes were soft with kindness.

'Loving your daughter isn't just a feeling,' she said. 'It's a doing act as well, and everything you do for her shows just how much you love her.'

Later, I learnt that what I'd experienced was called equine, or horse, therapy.

Horses were naturally sensitive animals, and Andy, my new four-legged friend, had picked up on my sadness and reached out to touch my heart.

Rosemary had then been able to help me talk about the feelings I'd kept hidden.

As I returned home, I knew something inside me had changed.

The fog began to lift, and my relationship with Tali changed.

When I took her to a pottery class or to the park, I didn't have to force myself.

I wanted to enjoy every moment with my little girl. In time, I told Doug: 'I'm

'It's all OK Mum'

Tali and me

Edited by Charlotte Owen. Email mystory@bauermedia.co.uk

Photos: Pochi and Pochi

● Grace's book: The Yard: How A Horse Healed My Heart, is available on Amazon.

Take a Break 29

GRACE OLSON AUTHOR

Your Horse Magazine, November 2022

YOUR HORSE MAGAZINE
meets
Grace Olson

The author, whose new semi-autobiographical novel is currently flying off the bookshelves, tells Julie Harding how horses helped to cure her of a protracted bout of severe postnatal depression that came close to driving her to suicide

GRACE OLSON WOULD clock watch. Obsessively. With the accuracy of a potential military manoeuvre, she would know, to the minute, when she was scheduled to feed her newborn daughter, Tali; when her nappy would need to be swapped for a pristine clean one; when she needed to be laid gently in her Moses basket for her afternoon nap. Every day was the same. Monday round to Sunday. Week in, week out. Month after month. This preoccupation brought no joy to Grace's life. The elation that had followed the discovery that she was expecting her first child was absent. At that point, only weeks before, she had gleefully gone shopping and purchased all of the usual baby paraphernalia — buggy, car seat, cot. Then she found herself in hospital, which is when the unexpected happened.

"Tali was two weeks late and then she got stuck and her heart was slowing, so I was given an emergency Caesarean section. The anaesthetic wore off when I was being sewed up and everyone ignored my pleas for help. That's when I went into shock."

Nothing would be the same again for years for Grace, a massage therapist. She endured a week in hospital, with Tali in the special care baby unit suffering from jaundice. However, returning home and shutting her front door, now alone with her newborn for the first time, was far worse.

"That's when the depression really kicked in," says Grace, whose partner, Doug, an osteopath, worked long hours and was rarely around. "But

INTERVIEW

"I would feel fear when Tali made the slightest noise. My heart would explode and I would go cold and feel sick. The sound was so ordinary, but for me it brought utter terror"

Grace with her mare, Pippa, one of the horses who has helped to heal her postnatal depression

14 YOUR HORSE NOVEMBER 2022

WWW.YOURHORSE.CO.UK

WWW.YOURHORSE.CO.UK

NOVEMBER 2022 YOUR HORSE 15

Horse & Hound
July 2022

Home / News

'I was like a stone with no emotion': rider who was 'healed by horses' hopes now to help others

Eleanor Jones
9 July, 2022, 20:53

A rider who credits horses for "healing her heart" when she had post-natal depression hopes now to help horses, and people, in her turn.

Grace Olson has written a book about her experiences, which she hopes will not only benefit others but also raise funds for equine rescue centre Hope Pastures.

She told H&H she works with people who have serious illnesses; offering massage, healing and coaching. But when the first Covid lockdown was brought in, she could not work.

"I'd always wanted to write so I wrote a short episode on a horsey Facebook group and it got so many likes, I set up a page," she said. "It became popular so I set up a website, and someone said 'Why don't you write it as a book?' I thought 'Go on then!'"

Advertisement

Cover as individual as you and your horse

Find out more >

NFU Mutual
EQUINE INSURANCE

"It brought a bit of joy to people; I wrote an episode a week during lockdown and people were emailing to say it made them laugh, and carry on. And it made me carry on, to think people were enjoying it."

Grace had a bad experience when she gave birth to her daughter Florence, who is now 16.

"I had an emergency caesarean and the anaesthetic wore off halfway through," she said. "They all ignored me when I was saying 'Ow', but because I was in shock, I wasn't screaming. I could feel being sewn back up."

"It was like being in a horror film, then I was given this baby to look after — and it was horrendous."

Grace said she "went into autopilot"; caring for Florence but she became "obsessive" over cleaning the house, and "I couldn't feel," she said. "I was like a stone with no emotion."

"But being with horses opened my heart."

One of Grace's clients was a horse owner, and hearing her tales, and remembering how much she had loved riding as a child, although she had never been able to have a horse of her own, Grace went back to the yard.

"It might sound a bit hippy-dippy but horses have a natural healing energy," she said. "I met an amazing woman with a mountain farm in Wales and had the most unbelievable healing experience. It made me realise I'm not a shit mother, and I learned what love really is."

Grace believes that had she not found horses again, she would still be depressed.

"My life would just be empty," she said.

She now has her own horses, and involves them in offering equine-assisted therapy to her clients.

"I want other people to have that chance," she said. "To realise that, whatever happens, they can always be all right. The dream is to earn enough from the book to be able to live off it, and to be able to treat people without having to charge them, because often people with cancer can't work."

Grace has her "big ginger" Irish sport horse Poppy, and Belle, a part-bred Welsh section D rehomed from Hope Pastures. She launched the book, which has been compared to the works of James Herriot, at the sanctuary to raise funds.

"The world is so miserable at the moment," she said. "I just want to help people laugh."

The Yard: How a Horse Healed My Heart is on sale online now.